who happen to be willing to reach the objective of production, by making all other people benefit from it.

In order to enable Canada and the United States to attain this objective, it will be necessary to steer off the beaten tracks, to adopt a new policy and, instead of over-taxing, to grant discounts leading to a decrease in prices and an increase in purchasing power.

In my view, unless different measures are taken, we shall see, as we did during the period from 1935 to 1940, economic rivalry between countries which can only lead to war.

I would not wish that we take the same means at this time because we would undoubtedly get the same results, which would be unfortunate. We are in peacetime and we have huge stocks of products manufactured by the population. Let us be wise enough, at least with our possibilities throughout the world, to transport that wealth to those who need it. Let us be wise enough to find the financial means to reach that goal.

That is my suggestion in answer to the statement of the Minister of Finance.
