

such a burden to carry. He continually surprises me by the wise head which he carries on his young shoulders and the seriousness of his purpose.

From all this I wish you to understand that his mother could not have exaggerated Ted's many fine qualities and abilities, no matter how much she may have dealt in superlatives.

Believe me,

sincerely and cordially,

William L. Henry.