INDIAN CHARACTERS

now we live in peace. But there were some things that we had in olden times that I would like the young to know. In the old days, the young people always paid great respect to the old people and to those that were in authority. Since our young people have gone among the whites so much, some of them have become rough and careless and are not nearly so respectful to the Chiefs and their Missionaries as they should be. Now we are at the Missionary meeting. I hope that all will unite in helping the Society all they can. Now come on, all you strong, young people, vou who say you are so good. You have been earning lots of money;' and, pulling out a piece of paper wrapped up tightly, she laid it on the little table by her and said, 'Here is my ten cents. I want to help the Missionary Society all I can.' She continued to urge the congregation to give what they could to help spread the Gospel in return for the blessings that they had received through the Missionary Society. Shortly after, Dr. Bolton spread out the little paper on the table and found that it was ten dollars, the giving of which must have involved a great sacrifice on her part, for she was very poor at that time. Before the next Missionary meeting came round, she had gone home to be forever with the Lord."

The Rev. S. S. Osterhout, referring to her death, says, "Several adults have died, all of whom left bright testimonies of divine presence with clear and certain hope of heaven. Victoria Yonge, a Chiefess of considerable distinction and influence, who gave to the Missionary fund last year the sum of ten dollars, was among the number. We are certain that to-day she does not regret that she erected this beautiful little monument to her faith in Christ and love for the Church which led her from the thraldom of heathenism into the liberty of the Gospel."

Oh, the thought of meeting such a trophy of grace in
