It will destroy the agitation in favor of the abandonment of the public ownership of the line: it will save the taxpayer the immense sum which he has now to contribute annually to the cost of operation, and it will facilitate the extension of the governmen line across the continent in due time If the Intercolonial, under good management, can be made a paying proposition, there is no reason why is should not be the next line to cross the prairies. There is room for a multi-plicity of railroads in the west—all walker, Liberal, had the seat by virtue of a majority of 88. Hyman was elected in 1891 by 183; Major Beattie in 1896 by 41, and Hyman in 1900 by 547 and 1904 by 24.

North Wellington was won by Thomas Iranscontinental? Of immense importance is the project to commercialize fority over John McGowan, Conservathe government line. Equally valuable is the project to develop the railway commission into a public utilities commission and to make it the protector o the rights of the people in respect of all the great franchises. On the same line we have progressive propos as regards the telegraph and telephone franchises for the public good. The British policy is to incorporate the telegraph and the telephone in the postal department. Canada may well follow the example of the motherland. Government ownership of these services gives the best results at the lowvices gives the best results at the low-est figure, unless, indeed, politics in-tervenes, and that must be prevented."

> .The Ottawa Citizen, discussing the platform, says that the main planks are sure to appeal to the people as the public interest.

> The Hamilton newspapers fairly represent three different shades of opinion. The Spectator (Con.) stands by the leader and the platform, but without enthusiasm. The Herald (Ind.) independent of the Charles of the Char dorses both most heartily. The Times (Lib.) assails the platform and the speech, and is quite worked up over their evident leaning towards government ownership. In the course of a long editorial The /Times says: "Mr. Borden shies, however, uches Mr. Maclean's state ownership of railways. Whether it could succeed or not, he says, 'remains to be determined.' And so he leaves it, declaring, however, that private busi-nesses sometimes fall, hence 'should all private business enterprises be abandoned?' Could childishness suggest anything more absurd as an argument? How Mr. Maclean must laugh as he reads of his pupil's ef-

The Montreal Gazette (Con.) does not openly rebel, but it questions the propriety of Mr. Borden's views upon government ownership as follows:
"Perhaps most attention will be attracted to the telephone and telegraph ownership proposal. It s what many regard as the legitimate beginning of a policy which will make all the great means of transportation the property of the public, as the common highways are to-day. It is also what many doubt the wisdom of, seeing what public management too often produces and especially what it has produced in connection with the government-owned railways of Canada. The telegraph and telephone lines of Canada represent a heavy investment of capital. many parts of the country they have only begun to spread. Their purchase would involve a heavy outlay of capital, which would have borrowed, and there would have to be continued capital expenditures on extensions as the country increased in population and commerce. There will be all thru the country and especially Conservatives, those who will think that private enterprise and private capital; which have provided this continent with as fficient a telephone and telegraph service as are to be found in the world, can be left to carry on what has been so well begun, at east until the country has less to do with its credit and until there is a general complaint that the services as now managed are inefficient or unduly costly. not part of a government's duty to do that which others are doing

It is painfully apparent that The Hamilton Spectator and The Montreal Gazette regard their lead r as too "progressive."

Hence The Hamilton Herald is moved to remark:

"That Mr. Borden's political program is too progressive for his party is apparent in the cool re-ception which its more advanced features have been accorded by the party organs. It is clear that many f the Tory organs do not like Mr Borden's radicalism. A program stuffed with nothing but platitudes about the sins of the Grits and the need of good government would have been hailed with insincere acclamations as a masterly and statesmanlike document. There are some platitudinous generalities in the Borden program, and these are the features of it which win the hearty eulogy of the Tory organs. The progressive and statesmanlike features of real merit are either hastily dismissed with a word or two of faint and timorous praise, or not mentioned at all. * * * The Montreal Gazette, the leading taken the earliest opportunity to express its dissent from one of the principal features of the Borden program. "There will be thruout all the country," says The Gazette, "and especially among Conserva-tives; those who will think that private enterprise and private capitinent with as efficient a telephone and telegraph service as are found in the world, can be left to carry on what has been so well begun, at least until the country has less to do with its credit and until there is a general complaint that the services as now managed are inefficient or unduly costly. is not part of a government's duty to do that which others are doing
