TO THE HOSPITAL SUFFERING FROM KNIFE WOUNDS

Suffering from knife wounds in his breast, Albert Sinstad was taken to the General Public Hospital last evening. The incident took place between eight and nine o'clock in a flat occupied by a family named McInnes in Germain street. Sinstad, who is said to belong to the North End, was taken to the hospital in the ambulance. The physician in charge of the case at the hospital had given instructions that no information was to be made public.

Crossing the Channel.
(Edward Hutton, in London Sphere.)
I do not think there can be another twenty miles in all Europe—certainly there is not in Western Europe—so crucial as those between Dover and Calais, so crucial in that they separate nations and customs so different, and all that these connect in spiritual and moral energy. We traverse them today in a brief hour, and certainly during the last fifteen years or so we have come to regard them, with the establishment of the Entente Cordiale, as a sort of hyphen which connects rather than separates two civilizations that are superficially so different but essentially one. Yet no one can ever have crossed these twenty miles without being struck by the extraordinary differences, not only of character in the people and buildings, but in the very landscapes to which they lead.

This is no new thing, of course, Julius Caesar felt it profoundly, and not without good reason. It was on the two occasions on which he crossed the Channel, and yet it is probable that in his day the two countries and the two peoples were more alike than they have ever been since.

Now it is only that we leave an island and enter a continent, or vice versa. That is much, but by no means all. It is that for good or evil the very souls of the two peoples are different, and express themselves differently, not only in language but in their buildings, their houses, their dress, too, the landscapes they have made, their fields, woods, their domestic animals, and in their tobacco. Moreover, the soul of the two countries is different. If we were not so you would not know the curious odor of France which reaches you even before you land, and which is a profoundly convincing thing. I do not know what England smells like, but foreigners have tried to tell me. Every Englishman who has crossed the Channel knows what France smells like; it is, perhaps, indescribable, but nothing is more convincing.

The two peoples which the Channel separates are the two great political powers of modern Europe. The immediate future, at any rate, would seem to lie in their hands, and it is for this cause a pity, perhaps, that they are so different. But for every other cause you can think of it is a joy and a delight, and except that should they quarrel today as they have always quarrelled in the past, our very world is in danger (at least, so we are assured), I would not wish one of those differences away.

For they will never understand one another.

As I went into France a few days ago, there was among others in my compartment in the train, a young married couple. She French, and very pretty, he English, and rather patronizing.

They were going to visit her family, and all the way he was fidgety. She was moved by the countryside—her country—every now and then this came out in little exclamations of affection or admiration for it. Not a word said he; but he smiled.

Then came the sunset—a remarkable and beautiful thing over that low, featureless Picardy.

"The best sunset I've seen this year," he remarked to her.

"Ah," said she, "you see, we are in France."

"Oh," said he quickly, "I think we brought it over with us."

Ungracious? Very. But he became even more Johnsonian before the journey's end.

After Amiens the landscape improves, and has a beauty that no one can miss.

"How lovely it is," said she to him.

with the most delightful of accents. "Oh," he replied, "France is all right. It's the people in it." A brutal stroke! Yet there you have it—an essential thing. It is a pity to say, but there it is, and if I may judge by this delightful couple, it need not be an unhappy dislike. I am sure they loved one another, and what is more to the point, got on splendidly together. After all, she was French and a woman, and he English and a man. I think that is the truth, and I can imagine few things more delightful.

DAY'S WORK NOW A PLEASURE

Halifax lady blesses the day she heard about Dreco. Dreco is proving its real merit in case of habitual Constipation, nervousness, weak stomach, indigestion, gas in the stomach, biliousness, dizzy spells and dandruff.

Mrs. Samuel Kaye, 1½ Liverpool Street, Halifax, N. S., writes: "I have suffered from stomach trouble for a long time. I could eat hardly anything without suffering afterwards. My kidneys caused me much trouble. I had terrible pains in the back, my liver was sluggish, as spots floated before my eyes and I got such awful dizzy spells. I always had to be taking something for constipation."

"I was tired when I got up in the morning. I hated to think of the work I had to do."

"I was tired when I got up in the morning and myself have been taking Dreco and the results are wonderful. The burning in my stomach and the pains in my back are gone, no more dizzy spells and spots before my eyes. My bowels act regular, I can sleep fine and can eat anything. My condition is greatly improved, and I feel much stronger, with a good flow of rich blood through my system, making my work a pleasure. We highly recommend Dreco to anyone."

Dreco is being specially introduced in St. John by Ross Drug Co. Go there today and ask for Mrs. Fenton, the Dreco expert, and let him explain the merits of this great remedy. There is no charge and he will tell you honestly. Dreco is also sold in other cities as follows:

Moncton—Geo. O. Spencer.
St. Stephen—Clark's Drug Store.
Woodstock—Vernham & Sillips.
Fredericton—Dibley's Drug Store, Ltd.
Chatham—McKenzie's.
Bathurst—W. F. Pepper.
Campbellton—Wan's Drug Store.
Charlottetown—E. A. Foster.
Summerside—Gallant Drug Co., Ltd.

ing frankly about the disease seems evident.

In Dr. Taylor's speech he made use of a simile which should bring the hope of treatment down to its simplest terms. The accidental dropping of a lighted match in a waste paper basket is but a small matter if one takes immediate action. But leave the flame alone until it has caught on rugs and curtains and run up to the ceiling, and it requires extraordinary activity to put out the blaze. Cancer begins often as the accidental though persistent irritation of tissue. Taken immediately it can be treated and cured. Later, when it has spread, when other parts of the body internally or externally develop lesions, extreme measures are necessary if life is to be saved.

The exchange of talk and information on this vital subject can lead to but one danger—nervous anticipation of the disease which leads people to suppose every rash or swelling an incipient cancer. Were the possible patient alive to the nature of one of our most active enemies, doctors would soon reduce the fatalities from this needlessly deadly ailment.

The members of the Melita concert party, assisted by local talent, gave an interesting programme at the Seamen's Institute last night. The various members of the party delighted a fair sized audience with their efforts. Mr. Main, of East St. John, had the audience mystified by his slight-of-hand tricks and by his rapid recitation of a list of names. The following persons contributed to the programme: Melita party, Mrs. Silk, Mr. Bear, Jack Davies and Mr. McPhail; local party, Mrs. Setley, Miss Elsie Hoop, Miss Sloan, Jack Luskley and Mr. Main.

THE PROPOSED IMPERIAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

London, Dec. 8.—(By Canadian Press Cable).—Premier Bonar Law, replying to questions in the House yesterday, said it would be premature to make any statement regarding the agenda for the proposed imperial economic conference until replies to the invitations sent to the Dominions had been received. However, one important matter the delegates from the Dominions would bring up would be in connection with schemes for development and doubtless another would be a proposition for the stimulation of trade.

The Opportunity Circle of the King's Daughters, with Mrs. R. D. Inness as leader, were hostesses last evening at the guild to the matron and visitors when a dinner and social evening were enjoyed. The matron, Miss Flower, is finding her work greatly appreciated by the different circles. Mrs. H. W. Inness would bring up would be in connection with schemes for development and doubtless another would be a proposition for the stimulation of trade.
