

CONTENTS OF PART II.

- I. The relations of the movements of Mackerel in the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Tidal Currents
 - a.*—The Prince Edward Island Double Tide.
 - b.*—The Eddy Flood Tide in the Estuary of the St. Lawrence.
- II. The Food of the Mackerel.
 - a.*—In European Seas.
 - b.*—In American Waters.
- III. The appearance of Mackerel in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.
- IV. Relation of the supposed Migratory movements of Mackerel to Isothermal lines.
- V. Movements of the Mackerel compared with the movements of other Fish.
- VI. Interpretation of the movements of the Mackerel.
- VII. Causes of the alleged annual variations in the number of Mackerel observed.
- VIII. On Temperature Strata, and their influence on the habits of Fish.
- IX. Influence of the different forms of Ice.
- X. Illustrations of the effect of extreme low temperatures upon the movements of Fish.
 - a.*—As affecting the Cod.
 - b.*—As affecting the Herring.
 - c.*—As affecting the Mackerel.
- XI. Recent Scientific Enquiries into the Sea Fisheries.
- XII. Synopsis of the extent and character of the British American Fisheries, compared with those of other Countries.

APPENDIX.