Staff problems surfaced at the Credit Valley Conservation Authority. Director of conservation services, Gus Ribeiro resigned. He argued that the authority was not seriously considering technical input from staff and said his replacement should be an engineer. In a brief to the divisional court hearing on the legality of the judicial inquiry, into alleged misconduct at city hall, the Attorney General's department claimed the inquiry should be quashed. The provincial ministry claimed that city council exceeded its authority in calling the inquiry.

Oct. 22 — The controversial Rockwood Estates development was in the news again after several buyers complained they were required by Sullivan Homes to make a $5,000 downpayment with only 24 hours notice. The customers had been on a waiting list for several

November

Nov. 5 — The possibility of a 4,500-seat arena for Erindale College, which would be part of an athletic complex, was announced as part of the school's propos ed building program for next year.

Nov. 12 - Mayor Martin Dobkin, councillor Hazel McCallion, lawyers Noel Bates and Joseph Pomerant developer Jan Davies were named in a $900,000 civil suit filed by former $900,000 civil suit filed by former Mississauga mayor Chic Murray and his son James. The action alleged that the five conspired to damage the reputations of the Murrays through the judicial inquiry undertaken by the city. The Murrays also asked the divisional court to cite Bates, the inquiry counsel and Judge Ray Stortini for contempt of court. The source of that action was a letter written by Stortini to city council suggesting that further investigation and hearings regarding the inquiry were "clearly warranted."

Nov. 19 — Surprise and anger were the words Alan Murray, chairman of the Peel teachers' negotiating team, used to describe the final offer made by the board of education to teachers. "This is the best possible position the board can the teachers and to the taxpayers" countered Ruth Thompson, chairwoman of the board's salary com-

Nov. 26 - John Graham, conducting his own defence in a bizarre trial where his own detended in a base that where he was charged with rape and abduction, admitted he did not know whether he had killed Karen Madigan, a 17-year-old Port Credit girl, in 1968. Graham had been acquitted of murder in the case.

The judicial inquiry into alleged misconduct at city hall was legally dead due to a divisional court ruling but was still a source of bitter controversy. In the On-tario Legislature, Attorney-General Roy McMurtry answered persistent questions from the Opposition benches by saying that the province would not spend money to go on a "fishing expedition" for Mayo Martin Dobkin.
