

vote as to whether... had been given in... decided by a vote... of an immediate... to the suggested... was passed in... committee in Mon... to call out men in... shop system of... inants are not met... and a 44 hour week... 21 cents per hour... for now getting.

FACT OFFICERS... d Wire... The conven... Association of... nd Decorators came... morning when offic... for the year as fol... loms Kitchiner, To... Secretary, Good... Secretary-Treasurer... Toronto; Organizer... Toronto; T. W... H. McCausland... Featherway, Tilson... Napman, St. Cathar... Hamilton.

sh Red Cross. Help... will be reasonable.

ren Cry... LETCHER'S... TORI

Man... FACT... ques... Canada... care to... ou do when... n DIVID... 0.

Man... FACT... ques... Canada... care to... ou do when... n DIVID... 0.

Man... FACT... ques... Canada... care to... ou do when... n DIVID... 0.

Man... FACT... ques... Canada... care to... ou do when... n DIVID... 0.

Man... FACT... ques... Canada... care to... ou do when... n DIVID... 0.

Man... FACT... ques... Canada... care to... ou do when... n DIVID... 0.

Man... FACT... ques... Canada... care to... ou do when... n DIVID... 0.

Comfort While Reading... A Pair of Well-Fitted Glasses... who have reached the age where vision changes... Where no complications exist, glasses for reading are all that are necessary. A little help while doing close work will conserve your eyesight considerably.

Harvey Optical Co. OPTOMETRIST 8 South Market St. Open Tuesday and Saturday Evenings

At the request of many of our customers we are stocking government fish. WHITE FISH and TROUT Cash and Carry, 15c lb. Charged and Delivered 17c lb. T. E. Ryerson 22 MARKET STREET PHONE 183-820. Automatic No. 1.

WHEN YOU GO WEST WE HAVE THE LOWEST FARE THE MODERN TRAIN THE SCENIC ROUTE AND THE SERVICE, TOO! CANADIAN NORTHERN

PRINTING! We are supplying Printing to Brantford's Biggest Manufacturers. Our prices are Right, the Quality Excellent, and Deliveries Prompt. We want to serve YOU.

MacBride Press LIMITED 26 King Street. Phone 870.

Broadbent Tailor to the well-dressed Man or Woman Agent for Jaeger's Pure Wool Fabrics Agent for Ely's Neckwear Agent for Aertex Underwear "Borsalino" and other High-grade Hats PHONE 312 MARKET ST.

AUCTION SALE Auction Sale of Restaurant furniture at 44 Market Street, on Saturday afternoon, July 13th, at 1.30—consisting in part as follows:—1 silent salesman, cash register, 20 tables 40 chairs, 7 mirrors, coal and gas ranges combined, 2 coal heaters, dishes, 100 pieces, 2 sideboards, pictures, cooking utensils, coffee urns, blouses, bed and springs, jardineres, table linen, 2 hall racks, glass and frame partitions, knives and forks, clock. This is a large sale. Come early, at 1.30 sharp. Terms cash. S. P. PITCHER, Auctioneer

DR. DEVAN'S FEMALE PILLS Reliable monthly medicine for all Female Complaints. 50 a box or three for $10 at drug stores. Mailed to any address on receipt of price. 7125 SCARBOROUGH ST., ST. CATHARINES, ONTARIO.

PHOSPHONOL FOR MEN Restores Vitality for Nerve and Brain. Increases "grey matter." Tonic—will build you up. 50 a box, or two for $1 at drug stores, or on receipt of price. 125 BROADVIEW ST., ST. CATHARINES, ONTARIO.

CANADIAN CASUALTIES

By Courier Leased Wire. Ottawa, July 12.—Today's list of 64 casualties reports three Canadians killed in action, five accidentally killed, six dead, 16 presumed to have died, two missing, 14 wounded, six gassed, ten ill, one injured and one reported missing in error. The list for western Ontario contains only one name: (11)—2,115,707 J. D. Leach, Col. Lingwood.

CONSTANTINOPLE BOMBED By Courier Leased Wire. London, July 12.—Air force contingents acting with the British navy dropped half a ton of bombs upon the City of Constantinople on July 7, it was announced by the Admiralty today.

TWO MILLION IN WEST By Courier Leased Wire. Paris, July 12.—The British fighting forces in France, now aggregate two million men, says the Havre correspondent on the British front. This equals the number on the front in 1917.

CHOLERA IN PETROGRAD By Courier Leased Wire. London, July 12.—Owing to the grave shortage in food, cholera is on the increase in Petrograd and hundreds of persons are daily falling victims to it, says a Russian wireless dispatch received today.

FOOD CONTROLL PATIENCE IN A DUG OUT Colonel Brain's battalion was in its place, eagerly awaiting the order to advance when a runner arrived with a message cancelling the advance until further notice.

NEW YORK STOCKS. Kemerer, Matthews & Co., 140 Dalhousie St., phone 154, quotes New York stocks, 1 p.m.: Railroads—B. & O. 54 1/4; Erie, 15 1/4; M. & P. 25 1/4; Can. Pac. 147; Penna. 43 1/4; R.R. 59 1/4; R. & N. 23 1/4; St. Pac. 82 1/4; Un. Pac. 122. Industrials—Amoco, 67 1/4; Car. Ind. 84 1/4; Smelters, 77 1/4; U. S. Steel, 104 1/4; Crucible, 65; Linseed, 40 1/4; Distillers, 56 1/4; Both. Steel, B. 30 1/4; Corn Prod., 42 1/4; Conl. Leather, 87 1/4; Am. Can., 47 1/4; Mex. Petrol., 95 1/4; Baldwin, 83 1/4.

ARRESTED IN SWITZERLAND. By Courier Leased Wire. Paris, July 12.—(Havas Agency). A Geneva despatch reports the arrest by the Swiss authorities of M. Gaultier, director of the Revue Domestique, charged with being implicated in cases of persons in France accused of corresponding with the enemy. It is alleged that M. Gaultier also was an agent in Switzerland of the Bolshevik Government of Russia.

GERMAN TRADE LOST. By Courier Leased Wire. Washington, July 12.—Germany has lost its trade in paper and paper products on the eastern coast of South America to the United States, with the possibility, according to a report today by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce that American mills will be able to retain the business after the war.

Monteth, in Timiskaming, Union church and parsonage were destroyed by fire during the absence of the Rev. C. Bisset and his family on a picnic. Church was insured for $1,000.

ROUND UP IN CHICAGO (Continued from Page 1.) the investigators appeared. Practically all of the several hundred men dancers were of draft age and the majority had failed to bring their registration cards.

When the separation of couples began some of the young women screamed and two fainted, thinking their escorts were being arrested for criminal offenses. Scores of young women were hurried away in taxicabs and street cars in search of the registration cards of their escorts.

"BEST MEDICINE FOR WOMEN" What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did For Ohio Woman.

Portsmouth, Ohio.—"I suffered from irregularities, pains in my side and was so weak at times I could hardly get around to do my work, and as I had four in my family and three boarders it made it very hard for me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me. I took it and it has restored my health. It is certainly the best medicine for women's ailments I ever saw."—Mrs. SARA SHAW, R. No. 1, Portsmouth, Ohio.

Mrs. Shaw proved the merit of this medicine and wrote this letter in order that other suffering women may find relief as she did. Women who are suffering as she was should not drag along from day to day without giving this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial. For special advice in regard to such ailments write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of its forty years experience is at your service.

quickly help to strengthen the digestion, stimulate the liver, regulate the bowels and improve the health by working with nature.

Largest Sale of any Medicine in the World. Sold everywhere. In boxes, 25c.

BEREAVEMENT. The effect of this message varied according to the moods of the hearers. The pipe smokers welcomed the opportunity of finishing their "Dill's Cut Plug" and the letter writers concluded their half-written epistles with appeals "to put in a few lines next time" and the cheerful assertion that "we are all in the pink."

Colonel Brain himself spoke his mind about the staff in general, and the Brigade Major and the Colonel directed the residuum of his watch against the rain which had caused the postponement, and retired into his dugout. There he drew up a programme of work to be concluded before dusk, and of the tasks to be undertaken as soon as night should screen the workers from the Boche's observation.

Half an hour later the Second in Command "rang up" whistling Ruzhinski's Melody, not quite in "Dill's" but near enough to exasperate Colonel Brain still further.

"Stop whistling that Han tune," shouted the late Colonel.

"Right oh! Sir, you seem upset about something," Har Boris beech catin' your jam?" Boris was a perfectly respectable grey rat, the fames of the ten that generally lived in the environs of the Colonel's dugout, and the Colonel never left the jam tin without its lid. But the double slender fell on heedless ears for in the left hand of the whistling Second in Command was a pack of cards and the Colonel's eye glommed eagerly.

"Where did you find these cards?" he asked, with a poor attempt at indifference.

"Special present from an admirer, Sir, but you'll see, you've left me against yours that you won't get this game out in two hours."

The Second in Command sat down at the table and laid out the seven rows of cards of pedes, to which the Colonel immediately settled.

"Send these programmes on to the Company Commanders, will you?" he said. The Second in Command obeyed and "despatched" the seven leaves from the C.O.'s note book to their respective destinations, filled and lit a pipe and affected an interest in the Colonel's game which appeared to be going very badly. He also resumed his whistling, but varied it to a well-known tune for which the Regimental poet had written a topical song.

"When this bloomin' war is over Oh, how happy we'll be when we'll cross the bloomin' ocean To our homes across the sea."

"Do you think this war will ever be over, Sir?" he asked.

"Not yet, I hope," said the C.O. "If it ends now we should have another within ten years and this one would have been useless. They push the war into next summer and then we've got 'em. 'Rain has its uses until it rains down your neck. Don't worry. You'll soon wish that he could be beaten enough now to satisfy us. Then he would start at once preparing for the next day."

"A page?" "If only I could find old 'Boris'!" "Eh, this game would come out. I believe it's missing."

The Second in Command said nothing for he had abstracted the ace of spades on purpose, and by giving his Colonel something to occupy his attention during the dreary wait. His singing went on.

"Only one more marching order. Only one more church parade. Only one more K.I. inspection. Then we march off to be paid."

The song seemed endless.

"The men don't think really think that do they, Sir? There's Corporal Maloney who sings that song at every concert and he owns that he has never had such a time in his life; and he has had all the times there are too. He doesn't want to be paid off. I'd tell you his comment of the huckster's note he carried in making worse out of the Rubal-yat."

"What had that reveal got to do with 'Durr Khayim'?" asked the Colonel.

"I lent him a Rubaiyat to give him a model for another regimental song, but he got so fond of it that wouldn't compose a parody. When he gave the book back to me he said 'I think it's right about the 'huckster's note, Sir.' No one on our side who dies for the cause will be tossed to hell, however much he was married in the making."

"By Jove," said the Colonel. "I wonder if that explains a thing that has made me wonder ever since I commanded this Battalion. I never could make out why the most careless, good-for-nothings went so confidently to their deaths. Perhaps that is it. I believe it is with some, and —" But at that moment the Second in Command found the missing ace. The Colonel seized it. The game came out. He claimed his bet, he laughed. He looked completely even at the rain. His temper was completely restored.

BEREAVEMENT. The effect of this message varied according to the moods of the hearers. The pipe smokers welcomed the opportunity of finishing their "Dill's Cut Plug" and the letter writers concluded their half-written epistles with appeals "to put in a few lines next time" and the cheerful assertion that "we are all in the pink."

Colonel Brain himself spoke his mind about the staff in general, and the Brigade Major and the Colonel directed the residuum of his watch against the rain which had caused the postponement, and retired into his dugout. There he drew up a programme of work to be concluded before dusk, and of the tasks to be undertaken as soon as night should screen the workers from the Boche's observation.

Half an hour later the Second in Command "rang up" whistling Ruzhinski's Melody, not quite in "Dill's" but near enough to exasperate Colonel Brain still further.

"Stop whistling that Han tune," shouted the late Colonel.

"Right oh! Sir, you seem upset about something," Har Boris beech catin' your jam?" Boris was a perfectly respectable grey rat, the fames of the ten that generally lived in the environs of the Colonel's dugout, and the Colonel never left the jam tin without its lid. But the double slender fell on heedless ears for in the left hand of the whistling Second in Command was a pack of cards and the Colonel's eye glommed eagerly.

"Where did you find these cards?" he asked, with a poor attempt at indifference.

"Special present from an admirer, Sir, but you'll see, you've left me against yours that you won't get this game out in two hours."

The Second in Command sat down at the table and laid out the seven rows of cards of pedes, to which the Colonel immediately settled.

"Send these programmes on to the Company Commanders, will you?" he said. The Second in Command obeyed and "despatched" the seven leaves from the C.O.'s note book to their respective destinations, filled and lit a pipe and affected an interest in the Colonel's game which appeared to be going very badly. He also resumed his whistling, but varied it to a well-known tune for which the Regimental poet had written a topical song.

"When this bloomin' war is over Oh, how happy we'll be when we'll cross the bloomin' ocean To our homes across the sea."

"Do you think this war will ever be over, Sir?" he asked.

"Not yet, I hope," said the C.O. "If it ends now we should have another within ten years and this one would have been useless. They push the war into next summer and then we've got 'em. 'Rain has its uses until it rains down your neck. Don't worry. You'll soon wish that he could be beaten enough now to satisfy us. Then he would start at once preparing for the next day."

"A page?" "If only I could find old 'Boris'!" "Eh, this game would come out. I believe it's missing."

The Second in Command said nothing for he had abstracted the ace of spades on purpose, and by giving his Colonel something to occupy his attention during the dreary wait. His singing went on.

"Only one more marching order. Only one more church parade. Only one more K.I. inspection. Then we march off to be paid."

The song seemed endless.

"The men don't think really think that do they, Sir? There's Corporal Maloney who sings that song at every concert and he owns that he has never had such a time in his life; and he has had all the times there are too. He doesn't want to be paid off. I'd tell you his comment of the huckster's note he carried in making worse out of the Rubal-yat."

"What had that reveal got to do with 'Durr Khayim'?" asked the Colonel.

"I lent him a Rubaiyat to give him a model for another regimental song, but he got so fond of it that wouldn't compose a parody. When he gave the book back to me he said 'I think it's right about the 'huckster's note, Sir.' No one on our side who dies for the cause will be tossed to hell, however much he was married in the making."

"By Jove," said the Colonel. "I wonder if that explains a thing that has made me wonder ever since I commanded this Battalion. I never could make out why the most careless, good-for-nothings went so confidently to their deaths. Perhaps that is it. I believe it is with some, and —" But at that moment the Second in Command found the missing ace. The Colonel seized it. The game came out. He claimed his bet, he laughed. He looked completely even at the rain. His temper was completely restored.

BEREAVEMENT. The effect of this message varied according to the moods of the hearers. The pipe smokers welcomed the opportunity of finishing their "Dill's Cut Plug" and the letter writers concluded their half-written epistles with appeals "to put in a few lines next time" and the cheerful assertion that "we are all in the pink."

Colonel Brain himself spoke his mind about the staff in general, and the Brigade Major and the Colonel directed the residuum of his watch against the rain which had caused the postponement, and retired into his dugout. There he drew up a programme of work to be concluded before dusk, and of the tasks to be undertaken as soon as night should screen the workers from the Boche's observation.

Half an hour later the Second in Command "rang up" whistling Ruzhinski's Melody, not quite in "Dill's" but near enough to exasperate Colonel Brain still further.

"Stop whistling that Han tune," shouted the late Colonel.

"Right oh! Sir, you seem upset about something," Har Boris beech catin' your jam?" Boris was a perfectly respectable grey rat, the fames of the ten that generally lived in the environs of the Colonel's dugout, and the Colonel never left the jam tin without its lid. But the double slender fell on heedless ears for in the left hand of the whistling Second in Command was a pack of cards and the Colonel's eye glommed eagerly.

"Where did you find these cards?" he asked, with a poor attempt at indifference.

"Special present from an admirer, Sir, but you'll see, you've left me against yours that you won't get this game out in two hours."

The Second in Command sat down at the table and laid out the seven rows of cards of pedes, to which the Colonel immediately settled.

"Send these programmes on to the Company Commanders, will you?" he said. The Second in Command obeyed and "despatched" the seven leaves from the C.O.'s note book to their respective destinations, filled and lit a pipe and affected an interest in the Colonel's game which appeared to be going very badly. He also resumed his whistling, but varied it to a well-known tune for which the Regimental poet had written a topical song.

"When this bloomin' war is over Oh, how happy we'll be when we'll cross the bloomin' ocean To our homes across the sea."

"Do you think this war will ever be over, Sir?" he asked.

"Not yet, I hope," said the C.O. "If it ends now we should have another within ten years and this one would have been useless. They push the war into next summer and then we've got 'em. 'Rain has its uses until it rains down your neck. Don't worry. You'll soon wish that he could be beaten enough now to satisfy us. Then he would start at once preparing for the next day."

"A page?" "If only I could find old 'Boris'!" "Eh, this game would come out. I believe it's missing."

The Second in Command said nothing for he had abstracted the ace of spades on purpose, and by giving his Colonel something to occupy his attention during the dreary wait. His singing went on.

"Only one more marching order. Only one more church parade. Only one more K.I. inspection. Then we march off to be paid."

The song seemed endless.

"The men don't think really think that do they, Sir? There's Corporal Maloney who sings that song at every concert and he owns that he has never had such a time in his life; and he has had all the times there are too. He doesn't want to be paid off. I'd tell you his comment of the huckster's note he carried in making worse out of the Rubal-yat."

"What had that reveal got to do with 'Durr Khayim'?" asked the Colonel.

"I lent him a Rubaiyat to give him a model for another regimental song, but he got so fond of it that wouldn't compose a parody. When he gave the book back to me he said 'I think it's right about the 'huckster's note, Sir.' No one on our side who dies for the cause will be tossed to hell, however much he was married in the making."

"By Jove," said the Colonel. "I wonder if that explains a thing that has made me wonder ever since I commanded this Battalion. I never could make out why the most careless, good-for-nothings went so confidently to their deaths. Perhaps that is it. I believe it is with some, and —" But at that moment the Second in Command found the missing ace. The Colonel seized it. The game came out. He claimed his bet, he laughed. He looked completely even at the rain. His temper was completely restored.

BEREAVEMENT. The effect of this message varied according to the moods of the hearers. The pipe smokers welcomed the opportunity of finishing their "Dill's Cut Plug" and the letter writers concluded their half-written epistles with appeals "to put in a few lines next time" and the cheerful assertion that "we are all in the pink."

Colonel Brain himself spoke his mind about the staff in general, and the Brigade Major and the Colonel directed the residuum of his watch against the rain which had caused the postponement, and retired into his dugout. There he drew up a programme of work to be concluded before dusk, and of the tasks to be undertaken as soon as night should screen the workers from the Boche's observation.

Half an hour later the Second in Command "rang up" whistling Ruzhinski's Melody, not quite in "Dill's" but near enough to exasperate Colonel Brain still further.

"Stop whistling that Han tune," shouted the late Colonel.

"Right oh! Sir, you seem upset about something," Har Boris beech catin' your jam?" Boris was a perfectly respectable grey rat, the fames of the ten that generally lived in the environs of the Colonel's dugout, and the Colonel never left the jam tin without its lid. But the double slender fell on heedless ears for in the left hand of the whistling Second in Command was a pack of cards and the Colonel's eye glommed eagerly.

"Where did you find these cards?" he asked, with a poor attempt at indifference.

"Special present from an admirer, Sir, but you'll see, you've left me against yours that you won't get this game out in two hours."

The Second in Command sat down at the table and laid out the seven rows of cards of pedes, to which the Colonel immediately settled.

"Send these programmes on to the Company Commanders, will you?" he said. The Second in Command obeyed and "despatched" the seven leaves from the C.O.'s note book to their respective destinations, filled and lit a pipe and affected an interest in the Colonel's game which appeared to be going very badly. He also resumed his whistling, but varied it to a well-known tune for which the Regimental poet had written a topical song.

"When this bloomin' war is over Oh, how happy we'll be when we'll cross the bloomin' ocean To our homes across the sea."

"Do you think this war will ever be over, Sir?" he asked.

"Not yet, I hope," said the C.O. "If it ends now we should have another within ten years and this one would have been useless. They push the war into next summer and then we've got 'em. 'Rain has its uses until it rains down your neck. Don't worry. You'll soon wish that he could be beaten enough now to satisfy us. Then he would start at once preparing for the next day."

"A page?" "If only I could find old 'Boris'!" "Eh, this game would come out. I believe it's missing."

The Second in Command said nothing for he had abstracted the ace of spades on purpose, and by giving his Colonel something to occupy his attention during the dreary wait. His singing went on.

"Only one more marching order. Only one more church parade. Only one more K.I. inspection. Then we march off to be paid."

The song seemed endless.

"The men don't think really think that do they, Sir? There's Corporal Maloney who sings that song at every concert and he owns that he has never had such a time in his life; and he has had all the times there are too. He doesn't want to be paid off. I'd tell you his comment of the huckster's note he carried in making worse out of the Rubal-yat."

"What had that reveal got to do with 'Durr Khayim'?" asked the Colonel.

"I lent him a Rubaiyat to give him a model for another regimental song, but he got so fond of it that wouldn't compose a parody. When he gave the book back to me he said 'I think it's right about the 'huckster's note, Sir.' No one on our side who dies for the cause will be tossed to hell, however much he was married in the making."

"By Jove," said the Colonel. "I wonder if that explains a thing that has made me wonder ever since I commanded this Battalion. I never could make out why the most careless, good-for-nothings went so confidently to their deaths. Perhaps that is it. I believe it is with some, and —" But at that moment the Second in Command found the missing ace. The Colonel seized it. The game came out. He claimed his bet, he laughed. He looked completely even at the rain. His temper was completely restored.

BEREAVEMENT. The effect of this message varied according to the moods of the hearers. The pipe smokers welcomed the opportunity of finishing their "Dill's Cut Plug" and the letter writers concluded their half-written epistles with appeals "to put in a few lines next time" and the cheerful assertion that "we are all in the pink."

Colonel Brain himself spoke his mind about the staff in general, and the Brigade Major and the Colonel directed the residuum of his watch against the rain which had caused the postponement, and retired into his dugout. There he drew up a programme of work to be concluded before dusk, and of the tasks to be undertaken as soon as night should screen the workers from the Boche's observation.

Half an hour later the Second in Command "rang up" whistling Ruzhinski's Melody, not quite in "Dill's" but near enough to exasperate Colonel Brain still further.

"Stop whistling that Han tune," shouted the late Colonel.

"Right oh! Sir, you seem upset about something," Har Boris beech catin' your jam?" Boris was a perfectly respectable grey rat, the fames of the ten that generally lived in the environs of the Colonel's dugout, and the Colonel never left the jam tin without its lid. But the double slender fell on heedless ears for in the left hand of the whistling Second in Command was a pack of cards and the Colonel's eye glommed eagerly.

"Where did you find these cards?" he asked, with a poor attempt at indifference.

"Special present from an admirer, Sir, but you'll see, you've left me against yours that you won't get this game out in two hours."

The Second in Command sat down at the table and laid out the seven rows of cards of pedes, to which the Colonel immediately settled.

"Send these programmes on to the Company Commanders, will you?" he said. The Second in Command obeyed and "despatched" the seven leaves from the C.O.'s note book to their respective destinations, filled and lit a pipe and affected an interest in the Colonel's game which appeared to be going very badly. He also resumed his whistling, but varied it to a well-known tune for which the Regimental poet had written a topical song.

"When this bloomin' war is over Oh, how happy we'll be when we'll cross the bloomin' ocean To our homes across the sea."

"Do you think this war will ever be over, Sir?" he asked.

"Not yet, I hope," said the C.O. "If it ends now we should have another within ten years and this one would have been useless. They push the war into next summer and then we've got 'em. 'Rain has its uses until it rains down your neck. Don't worry. You'll soon wish that he could be beaten enough now to satisfy us. Then he would start at once preparing for the next day."

"A page?" "If only I could find old 'Boris'!" "Eh, this game would come out. I believe it's missing."

The Second in Command said nothing for he had abstracted the ace of spades on purpose, and by giving his Colonel something to occupy his attention during the dreary wait. His singing went on.

"Only one more marching order. Only one more church parade. Only one more K.I. inspection. Then we march off to be paid."

The song seemed endless.

"The men don't think really think that do they, Sir? There's Corporal Maloney who sings that song at every concert and he owns that he has never had such a time in his life; and he has had all the times there are too. He doesn't want to be paid off. I'd tell you his comment of the huckster's note he carried in making worse out of the Rubal-yat."

"What had that reveal got to do with 'Durr Khayim'?" asked the Colonel.

"I lent him a Rubaiyat to give him a model for another regimental song, but he got so fond of it that wouldn't compose a parody. When he gave the book back to me he said 'I think it's right about the 'huckster's note, Sir.' No one on our side who dies for the cause will be tossed to hell, however much he was married in the making."

"By Jove," said the Colonel. "I wonder if that explains a thing that has made me wonder ever since I commanded this Battalion. I never could make out why the most careless, good-for-nothings went so confidently to their deaths. Perhaps that is it. I believe it is with some, and —" But at that moment the Second in Command found the missing ace. The Colonel seized it. The game came out. He claimed his bet, he laughed. He looked completely even at the rain. His temper was completely restored.

BEREAVEMENT. The effect of this message varied according to the moods of the hearers. The pipe smokers welcomed the opportunity of finishing their "Dill's Cut Plug" and the letter writers concluded their half-written epistles with appeals "to put in a few lines next time" and the cheerful assertion that "we are all in the pink."

Colonel Brain himself spoke his mind about the staff in general, and the Brigade Major and the Colonel directed the residuum of his watch against the rain which had caused the postponement, and retired into his dugout. There he drew up a programme of work to be concluded before dusk, and of the tasks to be undertaken as soon as night should screen the workers from the Boche's observation.

Half an hour later the Second in Command "rang up" whistling Ruzhinski's Melody, not quite in "Dill's" but near enough to exasperate Colonel Brain still further.

"Stop whistling that Han tune," shouted the late Colonel.

"Right oh! Sir, you seem upset about something," Har Boris beech catin' your jam?"