

Absconder Hunted Down.

The train was about to start and the young man who had just arisen from the seat beside a young woman from the day coach, was turning away when a tall young man came up the aisle.

"Why, it's Morgan!" cried the first young man with a quick hand clasp.

"How's Jim? Here," he quickly added, "take this seat you wanted my cousin the best you know how. Miss Ellington, Mr. Morgan. Goodby." And he hustled out just as the train began to move.

"Rather unceremonious," muttered Morgan, as he paused beside the seat and looked inquiringly at the girl.

"It's Arthur's way," she smilingly said. "Won't you sit down?"

And Morgan, as he bowed and took the seat, noted that this was a remarkably attractive girl.

"I haven't seen Arthur before for a year or two," he said. "We were in college together and great chums, but as usual drifted apart. What is he doing now?"

"Just now he is threatening to settle down," said the girl. "An indulgent mother has made life very pleasant for him since he came out of college. He has been abroad you know, and out to California, and down to Florida, and he has his shooting in the Adirondacks, and his automobile trips, and—well, his time has been quite taken up."

James Morgan shook his head.

"I don't like that," he said. "Arthur has good stuff in him. At least I always thought so. Besides, I don't like the idea of his taking these trips from a woman."

"Not even from his mother?"

"No. The principle is the same. I understand that a rich father might want to broaden his son's views by travel and by association with widely differing classes of humanity, but with a rich mother it would simply be a desire to pamper and please. Besides, I don't believe that true men accept favors from women."

The girl beside him smilingly opened her eyes.

"That's rather old-fashioned, isn't it?" she asked. "This is the twentieth century, you know. The world, or at least our part of it, seems to think that woman is quite on an equality with man in most respects, and that in financial and business matters the question of sex does not enter at all."

"I know," he said. "And I admit that I am old-fashioned about it. It grates sadly on my ideas of duty to know that a man is under obligations to a woman for his salary, or even for his salary. The sounds a little preachy, doesn't it?"

And he laughed as he caught the girl's amused look.

"Do you think it would be quite humiliating for a man to accept employment from a woman?"

"That's the way I look at it," laughed Morgan.

"Perhaps you have had some unpleasant experience that has prejudiced you?" the girl suggested.

"No," said Morgan. "The fact is, I know very little about women—I mean the modern woman. I was a country boy and never saw a city until I went to college. Ours wasn't a co-educational university, and, anyway, I was quite too busy to think of the girls. Since I left college I've been knocking about in out-of-the-way places where women never go. Went to South America to help build a railroad, and a revolution drove us out. Was assistant superintendent of a Montana mine, and a consolidation froze us out. Was foreman of the Acme Stamping Co. when the treasurer wrecked it. You see, I'm quite a rolling stone, with the usual accumulation of moss. But I fancy my turn will come yet."

"And may I inquire what your next venture is to be?" said the girl.

"I'm asking merely to discover what the chances are for your meeting the woman of today." She laughed with quite a remarkable display of dimples. "I fancy you'll find her quite an interesting study when you can spare the time."

Morgan turned and looked at her.

"I begin to think so," he said. Then he hastily looked away. "Oh yes, my next venture? I'm going to Monticello."

"That's not very promising ground."

"It may be from my point of view," said Morgan.

"Then you think of going into business there?"

"It depends on a certain contingency. I am going to inspect a manufacturing property there at the request of several capitalists, who contemplate buying it. If my report is favorable they will take it. If the report isn't favorable I am out of a job again," he laughed. "You see that integrity in business is some-turn the Russell-Bemis Co. 7 per cent. on their investment the first year." He laughed a little as he said this. "I can afford to be egotistical," he added. "It takes a pull to get a place like that."

And there the subject dropped. There were other subjects, however, to take up, and both Miss Ellington and her aunt were delightful talkers, and Morgan told them some of his experiences in the wilds of two continents, and something about his college life, and the time passed very pleasantly. There was a charming dinner and a pleasant chat in the library, and when Morgan was coming home on the last trolley car he told himself that it had been the most delightful evening he had ever known.

Two days later he received a telegram. It was brief, but to the point:

"Deal off. Company will not consider proposition. Send in bill. Culver."

When Morgan went to pay his hotel bill he found a letter awaiting him. The envelope bore the imprint of the Russell-Bemis company. He hastily tore it open. It was an offer of the superintendency of the Monticello plant, salary and other details to be arranged later. If the place was accepted he was asked to wire the city office and take charge at once. The letter, couched in strictly business terms, was signed "Phineas Ranney, trustee."

Three days later Morgan was hard at work. The trustee, a shrewd old lawyer, had brought down the contract, the salary was arranged, and Morgan was devoting every energy to putting the plant on a paying basis. It was hard work, very hard work, but his toil was lightened by his visits to the home of Miss Ellington's aunt. They had become quite regular visits now, and the more he saw of Edith Ellington the more charming she appeared. She had such a sympathetic way with her, and seemed so interested in his work.

"But why should you exhaust all your energies for people whom you do not know, and who undoubtedly look upon you as a mere machine?" she asked him one day.

He laughed in his boyish way.

"I don't think of them at all," he said. "I am working on honor, you know. My professional reputation is at stake. I've made promises and I mean to carry them out. Besides, I love the work."

And at that the girl gave him such a delightful smile that he remembered it for many days.

He had been in charge of the Russell-Bemis plant for perhaps ten months, when on a certain Sunday afternoon he said, in response to Edith's usual inquiries about the factory, that it would be well for the management to send a good man abroad to enlarge the company's market.

"We can double our output," he said "and at a very little advance in expenses, and I know the European market is just hungry for our goods." He laughed, "I'd like to go myself for a three months' trip. I could get away as well as not. Everything is running smoothly, and your Fallon, is quite competent to carry out my orders."

"And the trip would give you a rest," said Edith Ellington.

"I hadn't thought of that," laughed Morgan. "But I'm quite willing to guarantee again that I will make it a decidedly profitable rest for the company."

On the following Thursday the superintendent received a telegram asking him to report the next morning at the company's city office. He found Lawyer Phineas Ranney at his desk and the old man greeted him in his dry and yet not unpleasant way.

"Sit down, Mr. Morgan," he said. "I've just been looking over your last statement. Very good, sir, very good. You've done admirably, sir, admirably." He paused and smiled. "That's a good deal of praise coming from me, sir."

"Thank you," said Morgan. "I've tried to live up to my agreement."

"We appreciate it," said the old lawyer. "And we've been thinking it over and have come to the conclusion that it would be a good idea, now that things are running smoothly, to send you over to Europe, say for three months, with the idea of opening up a foreign market for our goods. What do you think of the idea?"

Morgan stared hard at the old man.

"It's an excellent idea," he said.

"Very well, then," said the old man. "You can arrange things so as to start about the middle of next month."

"Very well, sir," said Morgan. The old man looked up at him.

"By the way," he said, "the Russell-Bemis company would like to meet you in the private office. That is the door. Step right in."

Morgan, a little startled at the abrupt announcement, stepped into the apartment indicated and closed the door behind him.

A lady was sitting at the desk. She looked around as he entered.

"Why Edith—Miss Ellington," Morgan stammered. "This is an unexpected pleasure. I was told I would find the Russell-Bemis company here."

The girl looked up with a roguish smile.

"I am the Russell-Bemis company," she said.

"You!"

He sank into a chair. He was quite dazed.

"Why didn't you tell me?" he stammered.

"Do you remember that you said, and with considerable unnecessary emphasis, that you would not accept a salary from a woman?"

Morgan slowly nodded.

"Yes," he said. "But I never thought of a woman as an incorporated company."

Edith Ellington laughed merrily.

"Well," she said, "you will understand that I took your remark so seriously that I bound you with a contract before I told you the truth."

Morgan suddenly arose.

"Miss Ellington," he said, "this unexpected revelation may make a great difference in my hopes and my aspirations. I cannot wait for time to tell. I am going to say to you what I had intended to say when courage and a proper sense of my own deserving came to me." He moved a step nearer. "Miss Ellington—Edith, will you be my wife?"

There was a soft flush on the fair face that was upturned to him, but the clear eyes showed no traces of surprise.

"But your duties, your trip abroad?" she softly said.

He came still nearer.

"We will make it our wedding journey," he said.

A sunny smile played across the upturned face.

"The Russell-Bemis company takes Superintendent Morgan's suggestions under advisement," she gravely said. "And—and I think I may go so far as to say that—that she—cordially accepts it!" And she put out both hands.

"And now," she said a moment later, "will the superintendent kindly take the company out to luncheon?" — W. R. Rose in Cleveland Plain-Dealer.

Send a copy of Goetzman's Souvenir to outside friends. A complete pictorial history of Klondike. For sale at all news stands. Price $2.50.

Ice cream and cake served at Gaudolfo's. 1741

$50 Reward.

Stolen Sunday, June 8th, one mal-amate dog, very dark grey, white breast, light chops, light grey stripe running from point of nose up between eyes, front legs white, hind feet white, extreme tip of tail white, belly light color, always carries tail curled over back or left side, nose very small like a fox or coon. I will pay the above reward for any information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the thief and recovery of dog.

F. J. HEMEN.
Klondike Nugget.

The Nugget's facilities for turning out first-class job work cannot be excelled this side of San Francisco.

Alaska Flyers

...OPERATED BY THE...
Alaska Steamship Co.

DOLPHIN AND HUMBOLDT Leave Skagway Every Five Days

SCHEDULE

DOLPHIN leaves Skagway for Seattle and Vancouver, transferring to Victoria, June 12th, 22nd, July 2nd, 12th, 22nd.

HUMBOLDT for Seattle direct, transferring to Vancouver and Victoria, June 17th, 27th, July 7th, 17th 27th.

Also A 1 Steamers Dirigo and Farallon Leaving Skagway Every 15 Days.

FRANK E. BURNS, Supt. 600 First Avenue, Seattle. ELMER A. FRIEND, Skagway Agent

Pacific Packing and Navigation Co.

Successors to Pacific Steam Whaling Co.

FOR

Copper River and Cook's Inlet

YAKUTAT, ORCA, VALDEZ, HOMER.

FOR ALL PORTS in Western Alaska Steamer Newport. Sails From June 30th and First of Each Month.

OFFICES SEATTLE, Cor. First Ave. and Taylor Way. SAN FRANCISCO, No. 25 California Street.

Did It Catch Your Eye?

A Little Printer's Ink, if Judiciously Used, Will Do It Every Time.

Speaking of Printer's Ink, we have barrels of it, all colors; also the most complete line of Job Stock ever brought to Dawson.

How Are You Fixed

If you need anything in the Printing Line, give us a call, we can supply you with anything from a calling card to a blank book.

Remember, Rush Jobs Are Our Delight
Jobs Promised Tomorrow's Delivered Yesterday.

The Nugget Printery

$3.00 Will Do It!

Keep posted on local and foreign events. You can do this by subscribing for the

DAILY NUGGET

The Nugget has the best telegraph service and the most complete local news gathering system of any Dawson paper, and will be delivered to any address in the city for $3.00 Per Month!

Wedding

Miss Mary Eleanor

Rudolph Allen

will take place in St. h

Wednesday evening

8:30 o'clock.

Horse

CA

th,

STEAMER

Apply

Aurora Dock.

AL COMPANY

At Right Prices.

BUILDING, King Street.

BY CO., Ltd.

Yukoner, Canadian, Four Freight Steamers.

Season of 1902, outstanding steamers have all been in condition. Table service with the best of fruits and C. points. Reservations.

F. Lee, Traffic Manager, Seattle and Skagway.

SALOON

OLM, Prop.

Beer on Tap

At Bonanza Saloon

DORAY CO.

& Night Service.

T. H. HEATH, Mgr.

GARS...

Rose

FTON..

RSE

3 P. M.

PLY

Aurora Dock