The Face Behind the Mask.

A ROMANCE.

he. To this unexpected announcement he listened with most dignified and well-bred composure, and in his secret heart, or rather vanity, more disappointed than otherwise, to find his first solution of her tenderness a great mistake. Leoline held his hand tight in hers, and looked with loving and tearful eyes in his face.

"Dear Hubert, you are my brother—my long unknown brother—and I love you with my whole heart!"

"Am I?" said Hubert. "I dare say I am, for they all say we look as much alike as two peas. I am excessively delighted to hear it. Permit me to embrace my new relative."

With which the courtly kiss Leoline with emphasis, while she scarcely knew whether to laugh, cry, or be provoked at his composure. On the whole she did a little of all three, and pushed him away with a haughty pout.

"You insensible mortal! How can you stand there and hear that you have found a sister with so much indifference?"

"Indifferent?" Not I; you have no idea how wildly excited I am!" said Hubert, in a voice not betokening the slightest emotion. "How did you find it out, Leoline?"

"Never mind! I shall tell you that again. You don't doubt it, I hope?"

"Of course not! I know from the first moment I set eyes on you that if you were not my sister, you ought to be! I wish you'd tell me all the particulars, Leoline."

"I shall do so as soon as I am out of this, but how can I tell you anything here?"

"That's true," said Hubert, reflectively. "Well, I'll wait. Now, don't you wonder how I found you out, and came here?"

"Indeed, I do. How was it, Hubert?"

"Oh, well, I don't know as I can altogether tell you; but you see, Sir Norman Kingsley being possessed of an inspiration that something was happening to you, came to your house a short time ago, and, as he suspected, discovered that you were missing. I met him there, rather depressed in his mind about it, and he told me—beginning the conversation, I must say, in a very excited manner," said Hubert, parenthetically, "as memory recalled the furious shaking he had undergone—and he told me he fancied you were abducted, and by one Count L'Estrange."

Now, I had a hazy idea of who Count L'Estrange was, and where he would be most apt to take you to; and so I came here, and after some searching, inquired, and a few insignificant falsehoods (you'll regret to hear) discovered you were locked up in this place, and succeeded in getting in through the window. Sir Norman is waiting for me in a state of distraction; so now, having found you, I will go and relieve his mind by reporting accordingly."

"And leave me here?" cried Leoline, in affright, "and in the power of Count L'Estrange? Oh! no, no! You must take me with you, Hubert!"

"My dear Leoline, it is quite impossible to do it without help, and without a ladder. I will return to Sir Norman; and when the darkness comes that precedes day-dawn, we will raise the ladder to your window, and try to get you out. Be patient—only wait an hour or two, and then you will be free."

"But, O Hubert, where am I? What dreadful place is this? This is a very dreadful place; and most people consider it sufficiently respectable house; but, still, I would rather see my sister anywhere else than in it, and will take the trouble of kidnapping her out of it as quickly as possible."

"But, Hubert, tell me—do tell me, who is Count L'Estrange?" Hubert laughed.

"Cannot, really, Leoline! at least, not until to-morrow, and you are Lady Kingsley."

"But, what if he should come here to-night?"

"I do not think there is much danger of that, but whether he does or not, rest assured, you shall be free to-morrow! At all events, it is quite impossible for you to escape with me now; and even as it is, I run the risk of being detected, and made a prisoner myself. You must be patient and wait, Leoline, and trust to Providence and your brother Hubert."

"I must, I suppose!" said Leoline, sighing, "and you cannot take me away until day-dawn?"

"Quite impossible; and then all this drapery of yours will be ever so much in the way. Would you object to garments like these?" pointing to a doublet and hose.

"If you would not, I think I could procure you a fit-out."

"But I should, though!" said Leoline, with spirit, "most decidedly, too! I shall wear nothing of the kind, Sir Page!"

"Everyone to her fancy!" said Hubert, with a French shrug. "And my pretty sister shall have here, in spite of earth, air, fire, and water! And now, fair Leoline, for a brief time, adieu, and au revoir!"

"You will not fail me!" exclaimed Leoline, earnestly, clasping her hands. "If I do, it shall be the last thing I will do in on earth; for if I am alive to to-morrow morning, Leoline shall be free!"

you bring him to.

"Stay!" exclaimed the young man. "I wish you to assist me in bringing him to yonder apothecary's shop, and you may have this for your pains."

"This," proved to be a talisman of alacrity for the man, pocketed it, and briskly laid hold of Ormiston by the feet, while Sir Norman wrapped his cloak reverently about him and took him by the shoulders. In this style his body was conveyed to the apothecary's shop, which they found half-full of applicants for medicine, among whom their entrance with the corpse produced no greater sensation than a momentary stare. The attire and bearing of Sir Norman proving him to be something different from their class of visitor, bringing one of the drowsy apprentices immediately to his side, inquiring what were his orders.

"A private room and your master's attendance directly," was the authoritative reply.

Both were to be had; the former, a hole in the wall behind the shop; the latter, a pallid, cadaverous-looking person, with the air of one who had been dead a week, thought better of it and rose again. There was a long table in the aforesaid hole in the wall, bearing a strong family likeness to a dissecting table, upon which the stark figure was laid, and the post-mortem examination of the apothecary held a mirror close to the face, applied his ear to the pulse and heart, held a pocket-mirror over the mouth, and looked at it; shook his head; and set down the candle with decision.

"The man is dead, sir," was his criticism. "Dead as a doornail! All the medicine in the shop won't kindle one spark of life in such ashes!"

"At least, try! Try something—bleeding, for instance," suggested Sir Norman.

Again the apothecary examined the body, and again he shook his head dolefully.

"It's no use, sir; but if it will please you, I can try."

The right arm was bared; the lancet inserted, one or two black drops sluggishly flowed, and nothing more.

"It's all a waste of time, you see," remarked the apothecary, wiping his dreadful little weapon. "He's dead as I ever saw anybody in my life! How did he come to this end, sir—not by the plague?"

"I don't know," said Sir Norman, gloomily. "I wish you would tell me that."

"Can't do it, sir. My skill doesn't extend that far. There is no plague-spot or visible wound or bruise on the person; so he must have died of some internal complaint—probably disease of the heart."

"Never knew him to have such a thing," sighed Sir Norman. "It is very mysterious and very dreadful, and notwithstanding all you have said, I cannot believe him dead. Can he not remain here until morning, at least?"

The starved apothecary looked at him out of a pair of hollow, melancholy eyes.

"Gold can do anything," was his plaintive reply.

"I understand. You shall have it. Are you sure you can do nothing more for him?"

"Nothing whatever, sir; and, excuse me, but there are customers in the shop, and I must leave, sir."

Which he did, accordingly; and Sir Norman was left alone with all that remained of him, who, two hours before, was his warm friend. He could scarcely believe that it was the calm

THE FAMOUS ASPHALT LAKE.

N. Y. Post.

Asphalt is being dug out of the famous tar lake of Trinidad—the most notable existing source of the material in the world—at the rate of 80,000 tons per annum. There are still 4,500,000 tons in sight, but at this rate, the supply could not last long, were it not that the lake of bitumen referred to is receiving a constant accretion from the bowels of the earth. This accretion is reckoned as amounting to about 20,000 tons yearly, and would suffice to restore the lake to its original condition if it were allowed to remain undisturbed for a few years.

This wonderful lake of pitch has an area of 114 acres, and recent soundings made in the middle of it have shown its depth to be 135 feet in that part. Near the center it is semi-circular and bubbling, but elsewhere it has so hard a surface that a man on horseback can ride over it without danger of breaking through the crust. Scattered over the surface are a number of small islands, which have no proper roots in the earth, so to speak, but are composed merely of accumulations of soil, though trees of considerable size grow on some of them. These islands are not stationary, but are carried slowly from place to place by the movements of the lake. Now and then one of them is entirely engulfed.

DR. BARRIE'S KIT STOLEN.

Toronto, Nov. 10.—Dr. Barrie, Y. M. C. A. agent, who has just returned with the South African volunteers, is mourning the loss of nearly all his kit. He left the 14th to see the parade at Halifax, and on going back found his kit box ripped open and many articles, including curios, gone. He estimates the loss at $200 or $300.

We have a horror of being old and living in an old fashioned neighborhood where we would be referred to as "Uncle Billy."
