ANNABEL THE TEMPTATION.

CHAPTER XXXIV. BARNARD HAYES BECOMES A SCARFBOAT.

The table set suddenly formed in the dining-room at Rockstone would have been a study to any spectator who could behold it—the erect form of Philip Wellington standing in stern indignation, the genuine amazement of Mr. Langton, the affected astonishment and real consternation of his wife, and the obvious dismay of Barnard Hayes. It existed for several moments no one having the power to break it till the merchant gave vent to his amazement in words.

"Philip," he cried, "what means this?"
"It means, sir, that Mr. Barnard Hayes is a vile, unscrupulous schemer," answered the youth—"a traitor and deceiver of the basest description!"
"Good heavens, boy!"
"Philip, you must be raving!" exclaimed Mrs. Langton.
"Yes, he is mad," faltered the lawyer through his white lips, at the same moment striving to keep his feet steady. "The calamity has affected his mind."

"Yes, yes; that must be it," cried Mrs. Langton, with an eagerness which she immediately checked.
"His, in his inmost, guilty soul, knows better," observed Philip, very calmly. "Do you dare me to explicit statement?" he added, turning, and again confronting Hayes.
"Yes, I do," roared the latter, losing his usual caution in excited bluster. With curling lip, Philip drew forth his pocket-book, took thence a folded paper, and handed it to Mr. Langton.
"Will you be good enough to say what that is?" he quickly asked.
The merchant took the paper, and opened it, amid breathless silence—the hearts of two of those present quaking the while with nearly insupportable suspense. Mr. Langton gave a great start.
"Why, bless me, it is the marriage certificate!" he cried. "You have succeeded in your mission, then? You have seen Jerry just?"

"Yes," rejoined Philip. "I have succeeded, in spite of that man's machinations. He has carried them on secretly and unsuspected till now, but I discovered all on the other side of the Atlantic, and now I unmask him. He has dared the exposure, and I shall be fully made. First of all, he surreptitiously introduced into Mr. Seymour's will the clause which made it necessary to have the marriage proved; then finding that this manoeuvre might be rendered abortive by the discovery that there was a man in America who had a knowledge of the time and place of the marriage, he hired a low brutal assassin to go there and kill that man ere I could reach him."

"Monstrous!" ejaculated Mr. Langton, who had stood with upraised hands and horror-stricken countenance.
"O, these horrible things cannot—cannot be true," cried his wife, trying to affect the same horrified look. "Speak, Barnard, speak, and say they are false, utterly false."

"He cannot," pursued Philip. "He knows it would be vain to do so. 'I don't require to do so,' burst forth Hayes, his features frightfully contorted with rage and desperation. 'What have I to fear from wild and slanderous statements, unsubstantiated by the faintest shadow of proof?'"

"Oh, you demand proof, do you? Perhaps you may be glad to know that it will be impossible for your tool to give evidence against you, seeing that he was hanged by the white settlers for the crime which you commissioned him to commit. Ere I could reach the side of Jerry just your agent had given him his death blow, but was still soon enough to hear him name the place of the marriage, and indicate where the certificate was to be found."

"And Sam Lorton was hanged," shouted Hayes, with a wild and frantic impulse, the consummate folly of which he saw the moment he had given way to it.
"Ha," exclaimed Philip, "that was the fellow's name? I never knew it till this. Judge him now, Mr. Langton. He has betrayed himself."

"Why—you spoke of Sam Lorton," yelled the lawyer, who had utterly lost command of himself.
"I spoke of your tool, but I never named him, and could not, for his name I never heard. You have uttered it, and as doing so has furnished full proof of your guilt—not to me, for I did not need such proof, but to Mr. and Mrs. Langton, whom you have so vilely deceived."

"Oh, Barnard, is this indeed possible?" groaned Mrs. Langton, raising her hands, as if to her face, but managing from beneath it, to send him one signalling glance, which he interpreted as a frantic hint not to compromise her. He was wily enough to see that in doing this his chance still lay, and made up his mind on the instant to attempt no further denial, but to appear as if he had been the sole framer and carrier out of the plot. He therefore turned aside, and made no response.

"We are glad to hear that the 'Clancton Gaily,' published by Mr. John Anderson, is having a large sale throughout the Dominion. Many copies are being sold in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Montreal, &c., and the gallop has found its way as far east as St. John, N. B. Six hundred copies have thus far been disposed of, and orders are still coming in rapidly."

"A Homeopathic Remedy for Croup," a family should be without some efficacious remedy for the cure of affections so universally prevalent as coughs, colds, sore throat, hooping cough and croup—some remedy, too, which can be relied on as safe, sure and certain. Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry combines the desiderata.

"Book-keeping may be taught in a single lesson of three words: Never lend them."
