COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

"Well, sir," he said, "I never did think that I should get dead tired of handling gold toons, but it's a rum world and that's a fact. Well, I never, and the summer house gone, and just look at thim there oaks! Well, if that bain't a master one!"

"You never saw a masterer, that's what you were going to say, wasn't it? Well, and take one thing with another, nor did I, if that's any comfort to you. Now, look here, just cover over this hole with some boards and earth, and then come in and get some breakfast. It's 8 o'clock and past, and the gale is blowing itself out. A merry Christmas to you George," and he held out his hand, covered with cats and grime and blood.

Blood.

George shock it. "St ue to you, Colonel, I'm sure. And a merry Christmas it is. God bless you, sir, for wast you have done to-night! You have safed the old place from that banker chap, that's what you have done; and you'll have Miss Ida, and I'm durned glad on it, that I am. My, won't this make the Squire open his eyes," and the tonest fellow brushed army a tear and fairly capered for joy, his red night cap waving in the breeze.

It was a strange and beautiful side.

ly capered for joy, his self night cap waving in the breeze.

1: was a strange and leastiful sight to see the solemn George capering thus in the midst of that windy desiation.

Harold was much too moved to answer, so he shouldered his last load of treasure and limped off with it to the house. Mrs. Jobson and her talkative niece were up now, but they did not happen to see him, and he reached his room in safer. He poured the last bagful of gold into the cheat, and smoothed it down. It filled it to the brim. He shut the chest and looked it, and then, as he was, covered with filth and grime, bruised and bleeding, and his hair flying wildly about his face, he and down upon it, and from his heart thasked Heaven for the wonderful thing that had happpend to him.

So exhausted was he that he nearly fell.

So exhausted was he that he nearly fell asleep as he sat; but renembering himself, he rose, and taking the parchment from his pocket, he cut the fadei silk with which it was tied, and opened i:

On it was a short instiption in the same crabbed writing which he had seen in the old Bible Ida had foud.

It ran as follows:

"Seeing that the times be so troublous that no man can be sue of his own, I, Sir James de la Molle, here brought together all my substance in roney from wheresever it lay at interest and have hid the same in this sepulchrate to which I found the entry by a chang, till such time as peace come back to the unhappy England. This have I done on Curistmas day, in the year of our Lord 164, having completed the hiding of the gold while a great gale was blowing.

Clara's Young Man — Won't you play something for us, Maud? Maud — What shall it be? Clara—Oh, anything you can think of that is appropriate. Maud—Then I'll play something soft.

Thus on a long gon Christmas day, in the hour of a great wird, was the gold hid, and now, on this Christmas day, when another great wind rand overhead, was it found once more, just in time to save a daughter of the house of De la Molle from a fate as bad as death.

with a bitter laugh. "The birch has the best of it."

Ida rose and closed the shutters; the sight of the storm affected her already strained serves almost beyond bearing. She began to walk up and down the big room, flitting like a ghost from end to end and back again, and again back. What could she do? What should she do? Her fate was upon her; she could no longer risk the inevitable—she must marry him. And yet her whole soul revolted from the act with an overwhelming fierceness which astonished even herself. She had known two girls who had married people whom they did not like, being at the time, or preteuding to be, attached to some-body else, and she had observed that they accomodated themselves to their fate with considerable case. But it was not so with her; she was fashioned of another clay, and it made her faint to think of what was before her. And yet the prospect was one on which she could expect little sympathy. Her own father, although personally he disliked the man whom she must marry, was clearly filled with amazement that she should prefer Col. Quaritch, middle-aged, poor and plain, to Edward Cossey—handsome young, and rich as Grossus. He could not comprehend or measure the extraordinary guif which her passion dug between the two. If, therefore, this was so with her own father, how would it be with the rest of the world?

She paced her bedroom till she was tired, and then, in an access of despair which was sufficiently distressing in a person of her reserved and stately manner, flung herself, weeping and sobbing, upon her knees, and resting her aching head upon the bed, prayed as she had never prayed before that this cup might pass from her.

She did not know—how should she?—that at that very moment her prayer, carried on the wild wings of the night, brought a fulfillment with it. Not in vain were her tears and supplications, for even now a deliverer delved among.

A few moments after midnight, Sunday, Patrolman Michael Lynch arrested an unknown tough on West Fulton street, Grand Rapids, for being disorderly, and started toward the patrol box. A gang of toughs at once gathered and the prisoner attempted to get away. The officer threw him to the ground, and while endeavoring to get the handcuffs on him William August, a hack driver, ran up from behind and struck the officer a terrible blow over the head with a club. The officer fell back, but recovered, jumped up and seized the fellow. With his revolver he kept the crowd at bay until the patrol wagon arrived, when he fell again. The prisoner was locked up on a charge of deadly assault and bail fixed at $1,000 by the clerk of the court, who was summoned. The patrolman is seriously injured.

The Weather Crop Bulletin, June 28, of the Michigan Weather Service, says: The reports indicate that the weather conditions of the past week have been very favorable to all crops, and the corn and oats have made rapid advances and are growing finely. The wheat is heading out rapidly and turning yellow, and harvesting will probably begin in the southern section in about ten days. Hay cutting is in progress in most sections, and the yield is reported as large and the hay of fine in about ten days. Hay cutting is in progress in most sections, and the yield is reported as large and the hay of fine quality. Although a few sections would be benefited by more rain, yet as a rule the local rains of the past week have done much to keep the soil in good condition to make the crops grow at a rapid rate, and no complaints have been received this week. In the late planted corn the cut worms are doing considerable damage, and some few fields have been replanted. Tuggs (excitedly)—This ring I bought from you a week ago for 18-karat I have been told is one-third alloy. Buggs (jeweler)—But, my dear friend, consider how much gold there is in it.

Is not only a distressing complaint, of itself, but, by causing the blood to become deprayed and the system enfectiled, is the parent of innumerable maladies. That Ayer's Barssperills is the best cure for Indigestion, even when complicated with Liver Complaint, is proved by the following testimony from Mrs. Joseph Lake, of Brockway Centre, Mich.:—

"Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came nearending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony, was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag mysolf about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarssparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an improvement in my condition. My appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attent to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life."
