

where he was soon after taken ill and died.

We have many books of fiction in our language, which have been for ages read with much avidity by our youth; many of them, with all the aid of fiction, certainly not equally interesting with this well authenticated narrative.

In many parts the mode of expression in the narrative, might, perhaps, have been improved, but the editor has thought it best for the author to speak at all times for himself.