General Currie,
President,
McGill University,
Montreal, Quebec.

Dear General Currie:

My daughter (Eleanor Croysdale Doherty) is now attending Radcliffe College (Harvard University), having been awarded a Bartol Fellowship there. She is taking up Ph.D. work in Comparative Literature and her Professors advise her to teach for a year or two to gain experience. Would there be an opening at McGill next September?

She is qualified to teach English, French and German. On graduation at Western in Honour Moderns she was awarded the Gold Medal in French; then she spent a year at Toronto University where she obtained her M.A. degree in English.

President Fox and Dean Neville of the University of Western Ontario, and Principal Wallace of Toronto University have very kindly given their names as references.

Believe me to be,

Yours very truly,

WJD/HTP.
