"... A fine story, admirably told."—World.

"The best short stories written in English that we have read."—Times.

"... Admirable alike as a story and as a presentation of human character. . . . We must not give away too many of the details of a story which, besides being well put together, is exceptionally well written."—Globe.

"Miss Cholmondeley's new book will distinctly add to an already high reputation. . . . We have rarely met in recent fiction two more thoroughly real and convincing characters than Lady Anne Varney and Wilson the millionaire. . . . It is rare indeed that any one displays so great an aptitude for the long and the short story, and Miss Cholmondeley can be heartily congratulated on her success in this volume."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A delectable story. Here we have a high-born lady who really understands the meaning of love, and a millionaire who positively attracts—a rare thing in a novel. Life is portrayed as it is, not as the conventional fictionist imagines it, and portrayed with a genuine artistic touch."—Outlook.

THE LOWEST RUNG

A REVIEWER, writing in the Westminster Gazette in defence of the Short Story, says: "Above all, let him take 'The Lowest Rung' and 'The Hand on the Latch' from Miss Mary Cholmondeley's latest volume, and fling them down as his last and most convincing proof.

"Of these last two stories it is difficult to speak too highly, for, of their kind, they are so nearly perfect."

"For the three stories contained in the volume we have nothing but praise; they are full of what might be called picturesqueness, and the author has the rare art of making everything in a story lead up to the effect—the final pull, as it were, that unties the whole knot—which she is keeping up for the end."
