Canadian Returned After Months in German Prison Tells Experience

Brutality of Guards; Captives Practically Living on Food in Patches Sent From Home

London, Sept. 24.—(Correspondence)—Four months' training on Salisbury Plain during an atrocious winter, ten weeks' active service in Flanders, thirteen months' inaction in German internment camps amid their earliest and worst horrors, seventeen months behind the gilded bars of Switzerland—such is the war record of Pte. G. S. Beber, one of Montreal's first contingent men, who has at last attained full liberty on Britain's shores. Beber was sent to another camp, Friedrichsfeld, which was a slight improvement, however, on Magdeburg, where in May, 1916, he was more fortunate, and after one year and one month he was "returned to civilization," as he put it.

The term "gilded bar of Switzerland" used above is only a metaphor, for the land of William Tell has done its utmost to make the exchanged prisoners forget the German hell. At Chateau d'Oex, Pte. Beber said the kindness and hospitality shown were deserving of the best epithets in the same measure as the German treatment was of the worst. The area of the camp was most ample for physical exercise, and passes were given once a month for visits to Lausanne and Montreux. Instead of degrading and repellent tasks they had the opportunity of improving intellectual and manual faculties by classes in language and courses in carpentry, basket-weaving, printing and tailoring.

Pte. Beber has recovered from his injuries, with the exception that his leg is slightly contracted. He was engaged in the insurance line in Montreal, and his brother, Lieut. W. C. Beber, now with the 42nd Highlanders, was captain of the McGill cricket team.

Cats in War

Stray dogs picked up in the streets of Paris are doing notably useful and intelligent service on the battlefield and, if the war goes on five years more, as we see Charles E. Russell in a moment of depression says it's just as likely to be as not, perhaps we shall be called upon to organize a neighbors' cat contingent and send it over through the submarine zone, a war service we would gladly render if it were deemed advisable by the military authorities.—Ohio State Journal.

USE THE WANT AD. WAY

"Oh, yes, they reached us pretty regularly, and indeed we would have been in a bad way without them. The men were practically living on these parcels, and when I was leaving for Switzerland several of the chaps asked me to tell their people not to worry about them, but to keep on sending the parcels, for that spelled life. Also they begged me to urge everybody to keep on with the war until the Boches were beaten hollow; even if that meant another year or two in Germany, they were prepared to 'stick it' rather than give Germany a chance of another war ten years hence.

"When they say that," added Beber, "it means something, if you know what German prison camps are like."

Three Grades of Prisoners.

Questioned as to the nature of his captivity in these camps, Beber said there were three grades of prisoners: (1) Those who were executed duty; (2) light duty in camp; (3) duty—which meant anything from being driven to mental tasks or imprisonment in a fortress if commands were disobeyed. Beber takes exception to the Times correspondent's suggestion that work was a palliative of the camp life. He shares the opinion of many of his fellows that they should refuse to work.

Once the gate of liberty was approached, Pte. Beber was sent to Aschheim—the clearing house for final examination—but was sent back to another camp, Friedrichsfeld, which was a slight improvement, however, on Magdeburg, where in May, 1916, he was more fortunate, and after one year and one month he was "returned to civilization," as he put it.

The new government elevator in Prince William street will prevent the vessels at the entrance to the harbor from seeing the storm signals on the yard-arm at the top of the custom house. Captain Butler, who has charge of the signals, says that these are not meant for the vessels coming into the harbor so much as for the vessels that are in port. He did not think that any change would be made.
