day.

Dr. MacMechan said that the best definition of a professor that he had ever heard was "A man who read books and made two dollars do the work of one." The fact that a teacher was meeting the Merchant Guild of thic city was a significant one in itself. There was a movement on foot this week to make Canadian people realize that there really was such a thing as Canadian literature. He would have no difficulty in proving that Halifax was the gradle of Canadian literature.

The year 1789 was the year of the French Revolution, which marked the beginning of the era of the rights of man. Six years before 25,000 people had been transported to this country for no other offense than loyalty to a just cause.

These people organized a University, a Bishop's Sec, and a magazine. The First Magazine.

The First Magazine.

The first magazine published in Halifax was called the "Halifax Magazine," was published monthly, and consisted of eight double column pages. The first article was historical and patriotic. This publication only lasted four years. From 1806 to 1810, the Nova Scotia and New Brunswick Magazine was published, in 1826, the "Acadian Magazine" was públished, whose contributory articles were written by Halifax and Nova Scotian writers.

An ambitious publication known as the Halifax Monthly Mag.izine," was published from 1830 to 1832, numbers of which contained a picture of the Duke of Kent, and of that magnificent old building which nobody regarded in these days—the Province Building, which was the finest of its kind in Canada. He found an article dealing with the possibility of a time when a railway would sweep across Canada, which he thought was from the pen of Joseph Howe. First History Published.

First History Published.

The first magazine was printed by John Howe, the father of Joseph Howe, a Loyalist from Boston. Nova Scotia had the honor of producing the first history of Nova Scotia, which was printed by Joseph Howe in 1829, in two volumes. In 1835, T. C. Haliburton began contributing to the "Nova Scotia. Haliburton conceived here in Halifax his famous character, "Sam Slick, the Clock Maker," hence American humor had its birth in Halifax. Haliburton was the first man to get a hearing outside his native province. James deMille wrote thirty different books, which was first published in Harper's Magazine. The "American Baron" was translated into French, and another of his books was dramatized.

In 1890, Michael Williams came to Halifax, a mere boy, and afterwards wrote "The Last Romance," the finest contribution of all to the literature of Halifax, and one of the most charming stories ever written in this country. The literature of Canada began in Halifax, and Halifax had not lost its power to inspire.
