

LA MARQUISE de FONTENOY Very Rich Young Peer Crosses Atlantic on Visit - Sir Schomberg Macdonnell Retires from Office

Lord Leven, who will arrive today in New York from England on board the Lusitania for his first visit to this country, where his father was so widely known and had so many friends, is what may be described as a double earl, being not only the fourteenth Earl of Leven, but also the eleventh Earl of Melville, besides which he has a number of minor honors.

Lord Leven while at college distinguished himself as a steeplechaser, and now, although he holds a commission in the cavalry of the Territorial forces, is a banker, like his father and grandfather before him. Indeed, the eleventh Earl of Leven was so much of a business man, that he actually went to the length of disinheriting his youngest son, the Hon. Norman Melville, for sending his boy to the University of Cambridge, "whereby the probability of his becoming fitted for business had decreased."

The banking houses in which Lord Leven is the principal partner are those of Melville, Evans, Peck & Co., and of Williams, Deacon & Co., which have a very large American connection. The firm of Williams, Deacon & Co., succeeded to the business of the great firm of Williams, Deacon, Labouchere, Thornton & Co., which played a very important role in international finance during the early years of Queen Victoria's reign. Lord Leven's father was often in the United States in connection with his banking business, and was best man at the wedding of Consuelo Venaga to the late Duke of Manchester. The present Lord Leven's grandfather, the eleventh Earl, married the daughter of Henry Thornton, M.P., a friend of Wilberforce, Thackeray, Macaulay, and Gladstone in his younger years. Indeed, the thirteenth Earl, Lord Beaconsfield, in the opening chapters of the novel left unfinished at his death, was the headquarters of that society of wealthy financiers constituting the pillars of the Exeter House, being present at the time exercised a powerful influence upon English politics. Henry Thornton's "Family Prayers," proved a source of large revenue to the author. Lord Leven's family is a very ancient one, and "Melville" besides being one of its titles, is also its patronymic. The Melvilles flourished in the reigns of David I., of William the Lion, and of Malcolm IV., one of them being the latter's lord of Scotland. The first Lord Melville of the present creation was the ambassador sent by James VI. of Scotland to England in 1587, to plead with Queen Elizabeth for the life of his mother, Mary Queen of Scots. The fourth Lord Melville was raised to an earldom by William III. and married the granddaughter of Sir Alexander Leslie, who was one of the greatest generals of his time and who, after having been appointed by King Gustavus Adolphus field marshal of his army for his many victories in the Thirty Years War, was created Lord Balgony and Earl of Leven, by Charles I. The earldom was made transmissible in the female as well as in the male line, and on the death of the second Leslie Earl of Leven without male issue, his honors passed to the second Earl of Melville, since which time the two earldoms have always been united.

Lord Leven's principal country seat is Kirtlington Park, in Oxfordshire, which he purchased from the Dashwoods. It is the finest place in the county with the exception of Blenheim; and the mansion built at the beginning of the eighteenth century, contains notable examples of graining, gilding, carving, and other artimonium apartment known as "the Monkey Room," in consequence of the ceiling painted by a French artist, Clermont, on which are portrayed monkeys engaged in field sports. There is only one other ceiling of this sort in existence, painted by the same artist, in the fishing lodge of Monkey Island on the Thames, near Taplow, for the then Duke of Marlborough. Kirtlington stands in a magnificent park of some 10,000 acres, with oaks and elms many centuries old, covered indeed with both John of Gaunt and King Henry V., who made their homes there.

During his stay in New York Lord Leven's attention will doubtless be called to the presence of a tombstone in the little Dutch village of Pluckemin, N. J., in the foothills of the Orange Mountains, bearing an inscription to the effect that it was erected over the grave of Lieut. Dr. Henry William Leven, of the 17th British Regiment, second son of the sixth Earl of Leven and Melville, and who fell at the battle of Princeton on January 3, 1777, aged twenty-two; also an intimation that his tombstone was erected by "his friend Benjamin Knab, M.D., of Philadelphia, a mark of his esteem for his worth, and his respect for his noble family, relative to winter quarters at Morristown, N. J., captured the wounded soldier along with him after the battle of Princeton, and when the young lieutenant died en route, buried him with military honors in the graveyard of the town of Pluckemin, being present at the interment. This lieutenant was a great-great-grandson of the present Earl of Leven and Melville. Dr. Knab was a well-known surgeon general of the revolutionary army, and a signer of the Declaration of Independence. Rutgers Medical College, at Chicago, Ill., is named after him.

Sir Schomberg Macdonnell, who has just been obliged to retire from the office of secretary and permanent chief of the government department of works, in London, owing to ill-health, has frequently been mentioned as likely to marry this or that American widow or heiress, at any rate until last spring, when he unexpectedly died. He was long the private secretary of the late Lord Salisbury, when the latter was premier, and was granted leave by his chief to take part in the South African war.

Popularly known as "Pom," he is not known at Washington, and while Lord Salisbury's secretary, used occasionally to visit his old friends, Lord and Lady Minto, at Ottawa, taking in Washington on the way. Indeed it is now known that it was thanks to his advice that Lord Salisbury kept on Lord Panmure as British ambassador at Washington.

"Pom" is a much better tempered man than the looks, makes friends wherever he goes, and knows how to keep them, although he has the reputation of never forgiving an enemy.

When Unselfishness is a Pleasure

By BUTH CAMERON

"If you just wait," said the author's wife tartly, "You just wait until they've been married six years, instead of six months, and see if he is so anxious to make sacrifices for her then." "Please he won't be," said the lady who always knows-some-how, "and then again perhaps he will. I think it depends on her quite as much on him. And I think that if she shows her gratitude and delight as sweetly as she does now, he will take pleasure in making sacrifices for her after they've been married six years—or sixty if they live that long."

We had been talking of a young married couple and of a generous sacrifice which the husband had made for his wife. We had had the pleasure of witnessing both the sacrifice and the gratitude which rewarded it. And not only had the wife received gifts he brought her with an enthusiasm and a childlike delight which must have warmed any heart that had the pleasure of receiving it, but she had also remembered to return to the subject again and to tell several visitors about the gift in his presence. And each time that she did this she could almost be seen to glow with satisfaction and happiness spread over her husband's face.

Don't you imagine that man was well repaid for the sacrifice he made? And don't you think that, spurred on by that rich reward, he is pretty likely to keep on making sacrifices? When two young people in the first glow of their affection can not find enough to do for each other, the outside world is apt to agree with the criticism of the author's man's wife, and say, "You just wait."

And sometimes they are right. But not always, by any means. For when you come right down to it, self-sacrifice isn't wholly a matter of duty. It's also a way of finding happiness.

After all, I've come to the conclusion that you really get the most happiness in life out of doing things for others—that is the conclusion which one of the finest young men I ever knew reached before he was thirty. And, mind you, he was not in any sense a goodbody. He was an everyday man of the world who had tasted all the delights of social and business success, and knew just how much happiness the ordinary pleasures of life could give.

Now I happen to know that the man was thinking of the happiness which virtue brings its own reward—the fine glow of triumph and self-approval which comes to him who overcomes. If that was enough to make a young, pleasure-loving man decide that the real happiness to be found in giving for others, surely when there is added to this reward the further compensation of a genuine and sweetly expressed gratitude, self-sacrifice becomes an opportunity for pleasure rather than an ugly duty.

Let us see then that we give our part of the reward whenever we have occasion. Close by a cemetery near Paris a winship has been discovered with an attractive and thoughtful advertisement. The public house calls itself: "At the Sign of the Return from the Funeral." The board underneath bears the announcement: "Private rooms for persons desirous of sleeping alone."

HEADACHY, CONSTIPATED, BILIOUS, TAKE DELICIOUS "SYRUP OF FIGS" Removes The Scum From The Tongue, Sweetens a Sour, Gassy, Bilious Stomach; Cleanses Your Liver and 30 Feet of Bowels Without Grip or Nausea

If headachy, bilious, dizzy, tongue coated, stomach sour and full of gas, you feel unclean, undigested food and feel sick and miserable, it means that your liver is choked with sour bile and your thirty feet of bowels are clogged with effete waste matter and not properly carried off. Constipation is worse than most folks believe. It means that this waste matter in the thirty feet of bowels decays into poisons, gases and acids that these poisons are then sucked into the blood through the very veins which should seek only nourishment to sustain the body.

Most people dread physic. They think of it as a disgusting and distasteful thing. They shrink from the after effects—they postpone the dose until they get sick, then they do this liver and bowels cleansing in a heroic way—they have imposed upon.

Your Satisfaction Is Our Success!

Nothing of the sort. Our large stock of up-to-date Furniture ranks high, both in quality and style, and when we advertise an article cheap in price, don't think it is cheap in quality.
