That's where psychology comes in.
Now, since it is manifestly improbable that the rank and file of citizenry will be able to tickle their parading throats in the future with anything stronger than Parnassus punch and its blood relatives, the Hotel Majestic was confronted with the proposition of making the act of ordering a violet drip easier for the consumer. So from now on the Majestic, which has been famous for more than 14 psychology, will employ barmaids.

THE CONSUMER'S COMPLAINT.
O ye who have riches, give ear to me now:
My lot is a hard one, I'm sure you'll find it so.
For 'tis the consumer who lives in a town,
And the high cost of living is wearing me down.

One night I went home feeling blithesome and gay,
My employer that morning had increased my pay:
But, alas on the morrow I read with a fright,
That the cost of my food had gone up overnight.

I had thought that at least I could buy extra milk;
While my wife had a hope of a new wrist of silk;
'Twas all an illusion, I very soon found,
For my enterprising fond hopes were quite dashed to the ground.

The clothing prices increase of "costs over-head,"
The enhanced price of flour, makes dearer my bread,
The producer of milk cries aloud to me now,
That it
