wouldn't there be some sergeants in the box?" innocently asked one of the recruits.

A private in one of the regiments out on service was a strict vegetarian. One morning he reported sick and was told by the M. O. to eat more animal food for a week and then to report again. At the appointed time he again reported sick. Asked if he had eaten animal food he replied, "Oh, I got along all right with the oats and beans but I simply couldn't go the hay,"

A sergeant and a private were out sniping. The private was troubled with a bad cold and was continuously sneezing, which put the sergeant off his mark. "Confound you, you made me miss again," shouted the enraged sergeant at length. "I didn't sneeze that time," protested the private. "Of course you didn't—and I had allowed for it," replied the sergeant.

A private rushed into the medical office and insisted that he should have a pair of extra strong glasses. Asked why, he said he had made a painful mistake—he mistook a bumble-bee for a black berry.

The Seaforth barbers want ideas for a sign to go on their door. Why not try this one, Charlie: "Sergt. Charles Atkinson, Professor of Crinicultural Abcission and Craniological Tripsis." The only thing is—do not leave the painting of the sign to the man who labelled the wheel barrow with the word "Incinuator."

"How do you define a paradox?" a man in the Tube was overheard explaining yesterday. "Well, look 'ere—say a raider's fetched down by our chaps. Well, when 'e's down, all's up, and when he's down all's up 'e's down. See?"

One of our sergeants visited London one day recently and saw some of the big shows. He was most enthusiastic over "A Little Bit o' Fluff."

Love lorn private—I told her father I expected to inherit several fine pieces of property.

Friend-What did he say.
