Carriage Colt—Tuberculosis—Bindweed.

I have a great deal of trouble with my old hens. They seem to get lousy, decrease in weight and die. What can be done for them?

2. I have a patch of bind weed in one field. I purpose covering it with tar paper. How long will it take to kill the weed?

3. How tall should a carriage colt stand at two years to be eligible to show at a fair?

4. Could a carriage colt of this age be exhibited with shoes on? Can they be shown with open bridle or halter? Would it be proper to have a well informed breeder of carriage horses examine my colt and give me his idea of the class he would stand best in?

5. Is a young farmer allowed to travel in the city at fair time, or would there be danger of the military police stopping him and sending him home? G.L.

Ans.—1. From the meagre symptoms given we cannot definitely diagnose the trouble, but surmise that your birds are suffering from tuberculosis. Medicinal remedies are not effective. The healthy birds should be put in clean quarters, given plenty of fresh air and sunlight and fed liberally. Birds that are affected might better be killed and the carcasses buried or burned.

2. It would depend on the thriftiness of the plants. We believe it would be better to apply the tar paper and straw in the spring, rather than fall, and keep the plants covered through the summer.

3. The best type of roadster stands from 15¼ to 15¾ hands high. A carriage horse is around 16 hands high. This height is for a full grown animal. We do not know if there is any definite height for a young horse.

4. It would be quite in order to have the colt shod, and to show it with open bridle or halter. If in doubt as to the class in which your colt should be exhibited, it would be a good plan to consult a breeder of carriage horses.

5. Yes, but it would be advisable for him to have his registration papers and exemption forms on his person.
