THE TRUE SCHOOL.—An eminantly practical and timely address was delivered by His Lordship Bishop O'Connell, of Portland, Me., on the occasion of the blessing of the beautiful votive shrine, with its statue of the Sacred Heart of Jesus Pleuding, which has just been creeted on the grounds of St. John's Industrial School, Newton Highlands.

ALWAYS PROGRESSIVE. — She trains the children of the people not to despise but to love it; to be content and to do it well, for such was Christ's own attitude towards layor and the laborer. And in the face of accusations that she is not progressive, that she holds the people back, in discouraging knowledge, she pitifully smiles at her accusers and blds them in justice examine the results of her system, the outcome of wide experience, centuries of trial and their theories built upon a false view of life fostered at an enormous expense and found wanting in the bitter end. As it relieves none of the evils for which it was devised and produces very often more unhappiness and failure than they care to admit, though nowadays, even without their admission the results are well known. The Church has ever loved the people with a truly noble maternal affection, but she has never stooped to deceive them with adulation, or to lead them astray by false flattery. She pictures no millennium which can never exist and she gives them not fancy, but reality, as the basis of their lives. She knows that in the eternally labor, holy devoted labor, is a happy necessity for the vast majority. And not the labor of the brain, but manual labor, and in the face of this knowledge of the urgent needs of life, she has not beguiled her children into foolish dreams of an existence to them impossible but has girded them with courage and strength and virtue for real life in ALWAYS PROGRESSIVE. - SH dren into foolish droams of an existence to them impossible but has girded them with courage and strength and virtue for real life in which they must be ready to serve as well as to be served, according to the station in life which is theirs not by misfortune or ill luck or even by what the world calls chance, but by the designs of God for their best eternal welfare. And where her voice his been heeded and obeyed, the laborer has never been ashamed of his labor nor the artisan of his trade; he values the dignity of his life, humble though it be, beyond fine garments and his apron to this noble ideal is no stigma but the badge of his honorable order; the order of holy, honest labor, the order of those who are especially invited to the table of Christ's banquet: "Come all ye who labor and I will refresh you."

How HARM IS DONE—Examine what the Church has done and then see what fine theorizers have falled to accomplish and then you will understand the difference in their separate effect as well as in their method: I do not care to pronounce now upon the Old World custom where every father claims his son as apprentice to his own trade, and where the occupation of the sire descends to his children from generation to generation. Though, no one who has seen such conditions as they exist at their best can deny that these men are as happy, at least, as those who live where other ideals prevail. But I do hold that an immeasurable harm is done by the system that teaches the youth the despise his father's hands hardened by honest toil and where a false and foolish pride forces many or youth, who, as an intelligent artisan, would be a happy and useful member of society, into a sphere or profession for which he has no natural aptitude or ability, only to lead a lass life of empty hope in a held already crowded and where the warm toily of 4 life of artificially straining to be what he is not, is reported by desired descented and unhardened to descented and unhardened to desire the world had be a happy does not be a heady descented and unhardened to desire the world had be a happy does not be a heady descented and unhardened to descente and unhardened to descented and unhardened to descente and do not the grounds of St. John's Industrial School, Newton Highlands. His Lerdship spoke in part as follows:

There is only one true school of life, the Church, whose teachings have ever proclaimed this simple but sublime principle: "Each one in his place and all under God." In this sublime economy there must naturally be diverse places, according to the needs, the necessities and adornments of life in its full sense. There must be the brain to think, and the head down may never act, however much he may think or will, and the man who acts without thought or will is a machine and not a man. Human society is like a human being; it must have its brain to think and its hand to do. And the Church is the very heart of human society, which pumps the vivilying red blood of God's grace into brain and hand in the act which both together must perform. She would not change each into the other, but recognizing in sach a distinct and necessary organ, she combines the life of both into perfect harmony. From this true philosophy of hers she applies her principle to the varied phases of life. She knows that of the great than of the she knows that of the great in and knowing that this is no mere misfortune of humanity, but a divinely organized plan, she guides the thinker and blesses the worker Labor, she teaches her children, is no curse, but one of the greatest blessings that God has vouchsafed to humanity.

APRON AND GOWN.—Life will always have need of the scholar and the philosopher and 'tearning will ways have need of the scholar and the philosopher and 'tearning will were be the best guide to a refined and cultivated existence, but while we recognize learning as good, we realize that the pursuit of it to any very great degree is a luxury, a luxury to be cultivated in all its branches by those within whose sphere it naturally lies, a luxury to be accepted and utilized by those whom doe has placed in a position to enjoy it, or by those whom an noble impulse inspires to achieve it, who feel in themselves the unmistakable sense that their life is rather of the brain than of the hand; such a man may with courage and confidence exchange the apron for the gown; but our thesis is only meant to prove that life is more than learning and that laglor as well as learning constitutes life. This is the meaning and that laglor as well as learning constitutes life. This is the meaning and the laglor as well as learning constitutes life. This is the meaning af the trade school, whose object is to train the hand as the brain and the heart with both in the knowledge which makes life useful as well as slignified and happy and content each according to its station. Book-learning and trade-learning must go hand in hand as brothers, both blessed and sanctified into happy unity which makes each respect each and neither to despise in the them, both the modern educator, tired of failure of his old views, will have to invent, of which happy unity which makes each respect each and neither to despise in function in the land as the brain and the hard with happy unity which makes iffe to the proper of the countries. BRAIN, HAND AND HEART. —
And so this admirable school of St.
John's, though very new, is, also very old, for it is the legitimate successor and child of the great, noble, practical system of education which the Church, loving the people, has fostered among the people and which, under the influence of the Church now as heretofore, is producing the very best practical results in the training, not of the brain alone, but of the brain to think and the hand to do and the heart to feet the sweet influences of God's love which blesses and sanctifies both thought and action, both labor and learning. Here under the patronage and protection of the Church, guarded and hallowed by the love of the Sacred Heart, this institute is bound to grow and flouish and prosper as another proof of the good sense, the true philosophy of God's Church. Well may they be encouraged in their work who are devoting their lives and their enorigies to this sacred cause; one that brings happiness to the individual, for work makes men happy, and usefulness to the country in the education of useful citizens. Blessed are they who, since they cannot give their time or their labor, give out of their generosity the money and the means to sustain and further it,
For they may well be assured that,

THE CAUSE OF

PROGRESS MADE.—Speaking at Hartford on the occasion of the convention of the Total Abstinence, Society, Archbishop Ireland alluded to the rapid strides of progress which the movement had made. In dealing with the great importance of total abstinence he said.—In God's name, in the name of your families, in the name of your families, in the name of your rach the possibility of failure. Go to work. Bring in members, preach total abstinence. You are doing the work of God's Church. There are many societies in the Church; some assist in establishing reformatories; some give counsel and aid to the poor and the sick. Why, then, there is one society needed; if that were properly handled it would do effective work in many fields; and that is the Total Abstinence Society. Establish a society in every village or town, and if men are sick they will leave something to be inherited by their children. As for reformatories, there is very little need of them for old or young if people possess their mind and keep sober. You know the old story of the convention that was held in hell to find out why no Irishmen were going to that place. (That was a great many PROGRESS MADE .- Speaking at on total abstinence. Keep that up, and other sins will stop."

HOME EXAMPLE.—We ask men to come into our movement for the sake of example, and for their own sakes, because when a man tipples at all, no matter how moderately, he never knows when he may go too far. We want all classes in our movement. There is somewhere a false idea that this movement is rather for the workingman — for the poor fellows who have some difficulty to keep things straight—and you will find those who are moving upwards, and whose wives and daughters are in society, telling you. 'Oh, well, we must keep a little for our friends; what would they say if we hadn't a little wine for them?'—and sometimes a little something else more strengthening. I maintain that it is the so-called socially rising Catholics who need total abstingers of their friends, and of course, from time to time, the men will taste it to see if it is gotting old, and sometimes the women will taste it. Intemperance is very prevalent to-day in high society, and I make the appeal to our well-to-do Catholics, to our 'asslitonable.' Catholics, to our 'asslitonable.' Catholics, to put away the sideboard. To have a sideboard, with its wines and its brandies, is to instal in your homes so many pitfalls; it is to give a fatal example to your children, and it is the refusal to exercise self-denial for the sake of others. As we grow in the world our responsibilities grow, and those who have some means, and tive in aristocratic quarters. have have diagraced your home by keeping such stuff within it. If we won on, there is a great future before our people, and great honor is coming to Holy Church. We are children of the Church, and we can be apostles by our example. If we practise civic virtues, if we are sober and honorable, the country at large will say, "See what good citizens Catholics are,"

CANDIDATES FOR CANONIZ-ATION.

A Baltimore correspondent, William J. Cook, writes interestingly for the "Freeman's Journal" on the subject of candidates for canonization in America. After telling how tion in America. After telling how Saint Rose of Lima (Peru) is the only person who died in this hemisphere to whom canonization honors have been awarded, and having pointed out the names of many martyrs and holy persons whose lives certainly indicate that they deserved to be raised to the altars, the writer quotes the words of a venerable priest, long since dead, who happened to be with him in a certain country. This priest said:—
"There are ashes of saints here, as pened to be with him in a certain country. This priest said:

"There are ashes of saints here, as fully as worthy of reverence as the fully as worthy of the function of those from the rendering of specific honors, but the communion of saints does not mean the exclusion of those from the thought of the Church who have been, however humble and obscure, faithful people of God."

"Do not think," continued my venerable friend, "that the Church is oblivious to the virtues and worth of her children. She is with them in baptism, comforts them in despondency, pardons them when penitent, and gives them back to God as He may demand in His own good time, in lawful and sanctified conditions, Thus," said he, "there are saints here in dust, but whose souls are away beyond, before the Throne of the Most High."

These words of the good, old priest were brought to the writer's mind by the consideration of the two courts now existing in the United States relative to the right for canonization of two members of the Redemptorist Order. In this con-two courts now existing in the United States relative to the right for canonization of two members of the Redemptorist Order. In this connection the correspondent furnishes the following interesting reministences in connection with this subject:

"The first is that of Bishop Neumann, of Philadelphia. I remember him as a short, stout man, with religion and goodness beaming from his eyes, and his every word of speech being directed to the glory of religion. It was not only my pleasure, but my pride, to have served his Masses on his visitation to my parish in Pennsylvania, and now that he has been placed upon the list for beatification and canonization, I feel that I was highly honored. He was, prior to his elevation to the Episcopacy, pastor of St. Alphonsus' Church, in this city, and was the successor in Philadelphia of Archbishop Eccleston. Bishop Neumann was stricken suddenly and died upon the street. Archbishop Kenrick, one of the greatest lights of the American Church, was found dead in his bed. Heart disease was the cause of the death of -both prelates. The ecclesiastical court examining into the case of Bishop Neumann are pushing their labors with great zeal, and will have ample testimony to prefect their claims. ceclesiastical court examining into the case of Bishop Neumann are pushing their labors with great zeal, and will have ample testimony to perfect their claims. It is not expected that the final decision will be made in Rome for many years in the future. The act of canonization is only determined upon irrefragable and infallible evidence, and the sifting of it is not done in an ordinary lifetime. Should, however, Bishop Neumann be canonized, he will head the list of those who may possibly come after him in what has been designated as the American Church. But the Redemptorist Order is claiming another one of its membership for canonization honors, and, singularly enough, for another former pustor of St. Alphonsus' Church, this city, Rev. Father Francis Xavier Seelos was rector of St. Alpionsus' Church from 1854 to 1857, and died in New Orleans, La. His labors and virtues were of such a pronounced character that his brothern of the Order obtained authority to organize a court in his behalf. The court held its first sessions last April, and resumed its work last Thursday."

The Rich, Red Blood Hade by Fr. Wil-liams' Pic k Pills Gives New Strength to Every Nerve, Fibre and Urgan of the Body.

From the Budget, Shelburne, N.S.

Among the young ladies of Shelburne, there is none to-day who more fully bears the impress of perfect health than Miss Lilian Durfee. Unfortunately this was not always the case, as a few years ago Miss Purfee became ill, and her friends feared that she was going into decime. A doctor was called in and prescribed, but his medicines did not have the desired effect. Her strength gradually left her, her appetite failed, she had frequent headaches, was very pale, and finally grow we weak that a walk of a few rods would completely fatigue her. The young lady's family sorrowfully observed that she was steadily failing, and feared that consumption would claim her as a victim. One day a friend urged that she should give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial, but the idea at first was not favorably entertained; it seemed hopeless to expect that any medicine would help her after the doctor's treatment had failed. However, this good friend still urged, and finally prevailed. By the time the third box was used there was an unnistakable improvement in Miss Durfee's condition. Cheered by this, the pills were continued, and in the course of a few weeks the former invalid, whose strength was taxed by the slightest exertion, was almost restored to health. The use of the pills was still continued and a few weeks more found Miss Durfee again enjoying perfect health.

To a reporter who intersiewed her, she said:—'I believe that Dr. Williums' Pink Pills saved my life, and I carnestly recommend them to all who fear that consumption has laid its grasp upon them.''

That the facts related above are not in any way exaggerated, is borneout by the following statement from Robt. G. Irwin, Eeq., the well known stipendiary magistrate for the municipality, who says:—"I distinctly remember the pale face of Miss Lillian Durfee and the regrets of friends as they expressed their conviction that she would soon be compelled to say farewell to earth. Miss Durfee, however, carries the unmistakable credentials of good health, and frequently expresses her i

"Indeed I have, and am not

"And did not St. Paul tell Timothy," rejoined the first, "to take a little wine for his stomach's sake?"

"So he did," replied the other, "but my name is not Timothy, and there is nothing the matter with my stomach."
