Alice's eyes were suffused with tears as she bent her head over the lovely bud. It appealed to her now, in the midst of her happiness, with unspeakable tenderness of recollection. She held it to her lips, almost propertial, so moved that she could not speak.

Only think, continued Sister Collia, 'for nine months to come we shall never want for roses nor buds. Ah me! I think we value them less tor their plenty. It's a good thing to visit the prison now and again, intit, Alice' We love rosebuds all the better for remembering the weeds.

Alice raised her head, and looked with eloquent assent at Sister Cecilia.

'I love all the world better for the sweet rosebud you gave me in prison, as he said.

Sister Cecilia seemed puzzled for a moment, and then she smiled as if she recalled something.

'I' was not I who gave you that rosebud, Alice.'

Alice's face became blank with disabre placed condition to the cloudless depthw of her great and advertised and in a strange voice.

'No. I did not know of it until it was done. I should never have thought of it. It was thought of by one whose whole life seems devoted to others and to the Divine Master. Do not fear that careless hands put the flower in your cell, Alice. It was placed there by Mr. Wyville.

'By Mr. Wyville.'

'Yes dear; it was Mr. Wyville's own plan to win you back to the beautiful world. I thought you knew it all the time.'

'It was nearly five years ago; how could Mr. Wyville have known? There was a new earnestness in Alice's face as she spoke.

Even her wise and watchful friend, Sister Cecilia, smiled hopefully as she ventured to glance into the future.

But when the sky was clearest, the cloud came up on the horizon,though at first it was 'no larger than a man's hand.'

The visits of Mr. Wyville to Farmer Little's pleasant house were requent and continuous.
