Left in Library Books.

"It is astonishing how careless women are—it is generally the women about what they leave between the leaves of the books they return to us," said the manager of a very popular library. " I have found the tenderest love epistles and not a (" recipes for hair dyes, and so gr, and I have frequently returned such things their blushing owners These things have, of course, been used as popped in a book to be out of the way. Not very long since I found a false fringe, and County Court summonses have frequently popped up. I found the draft letter of acceptance of a proposal of marriage only last week, and as I know the young fellow to whom it was addressed you may imagine that I smiled. Women often come in with some agitation of manner and ask if we will look in such and such a book to see if some given article has 'got between the leaves,' and when they find that the book has gone out to some other read-er you should see their faces. But we usually examine all books that come in, and only lately we found and restored a #5 note."
