From Poilu to

EVERY MINISTER SHOULD CARRY THIS IN THE CONTENTION OF ANDRE MAGINOT.

Andre Maginot, the French Minister of War, a colossal figure standing six feet in height, is a believer in force—says a writer in Current Opinion. "Carry a bayonet in your portfolio," is his doctrine. It was probably the doctrine that made the one-time poilu minister of war. Maginot began life as a lawyer.

As politician, he accompanied M Jonnart, the Governor-General, to Algeria. He also served before 1914, as deputy in the French Chamber and as Under Secretary of War. From the conscription he was thus exempt but, none the less, he volunteered as a private soldier of the second class. At the blood-drenched village of Douaumont, near Verdun, a huge poilu meekly approached his captain and asked for leave of absence. There was a sharp inquiry for the reason. "I am Andre Maginot," was the reply, "formerly Minister, also Deputy for the Department of the Meuse and now President of the General Council which is about to meet." The leave was granted.

At Mageville there was a fight, already a legend among the heroic deeds of war, in which Maginot. promoted to a sergeancy, had both legs shattered. There he won the Military Medal and had to retire from active service. He returned to politics and at a secret session in Paris exposed the weakness of the position at Verdun, In 1917, Prime Minister Ribot appointed him to be Minister of the Colonies and later he was Mr. Briand's Minister of Pensions. When Poincare rose to power again, Maginot became his Minister of war. He thus belongs to that type of soldier-statesman of which Tardieu is an example well known to the United States where he served as High Commissioner.

Maginot frankly believes in force. One day, we read of him prosecuting l'Humanite, the socialist newspaper, for lack of patriotism. Another day, he will be proposing in the Chamber a separate Air Ministry. Then, again, he will defend as necessary a French army of 600,000 men and the employment of African troops. And, ever chivalrous, he reviews the United States doughboys as they leave the Rhine and unveils in Paris a statue to the English Edith Cavell, which stands side by side with the monument of Joan of Arc. He is ready to reduce the term of service in ? the French army from 3 years to 18 months, but he insists that, in any such reduction of military reserve, France must take into account whatever may be the nature of her compact with Britain.

When it was decided to occupy the Ruhr, a supreme test came to Maginot. He was the poilu, promoted to be Minister. Was the Minister, who had served as poilu, to manage a marshal called Foch or was a marchal called Foch to manage the Minister? There was a severe struggle and the Minister won it. While soldiers were sent to the Ruhr, they were kept under civilian and not military control. Constitutionally, Maginot was right. He would have no Boulanger endangering the Republic-not even the revered Foch himself.

What the future has in store for Maginot, it is impossible to say. The man who wrestled with Germans, limb to limb, who recently quelled a riot in the Chamber itself, who can hold his own in the turmoil of France against the successor of Vendome and Bonaparte. About him there is a certain splendid simplicity which lends a touch of greatness to his physical courage. According to Napoleon, every soldier should carry in his knapsack a marshal's baton. Andre Maginot is of the opinion that every minister, especially in France, should carry in his portfolio a soldier's bayonet.-Current Opinion.

Communists Awed by Hoax of Swiss Students.

GENEVA, May 21-The recent assassination of the Russian diplomat Vorowsky, at Lausanne, had a rather curious aftermath here, not without its humorous aspect.

The day after the murder the communists of Geneva organized a meeting of protest at the Apollo Theatre. A group of university students had it in mind to break up the meeting by force, when one of their number conceived the idea of playing a practical joke, designed to alleviate the pos-sibility of bloodshed and gain the desired end at the same time.

sired end at the same time.

Just as the communists were about to assemble, the student with the idea telephoned to the theatre and asked for the communist leader.

"Chief of police speaking," said the student in a stern voice. "I'll give you exactly one hour to finish your meeting. There must be no procession, no communication to the press; otherwise you all go to jail."

An hour later a band of students from a neighboring cafe watched the communists disperse quietly, with no sign of a demonstration.
