The Patient Takes a Bad Turn Near Midnight.

The End at Hand.
OTTAWA, June 2.—This has been the quietest day at Earnscliffe since the crisis began. Miss MacPherson, of Kingston, a distant relative, arrived this evening. Sir Leonard and Lady Tillev also came up from New Brunswick. Mr. Dewdney and Mrs. Dewdney spent a great deal of their time at Earnscliffe. Mr. Geo. Johnson, Dominion statistican, sat up with Sir John all night. He says the Premier passed the best night yet and partook of more nourishment than he had done since the attack last Friday. Lord Stanley this morning received a cablegram from her Majesty in these words: "How is Sir John Macdonald to-day?" Signed V. R. I. "As a matter of fact," his Excellency added, "I send a message to her Majesty every day."

At 70 clock the medical attendant noticed a change in his patient, and the 10 o'clock consultation resulted in the issue of the fol-

the usual nourishment at 9 p.m. (Signed) R. W. Powell, M.D., J. A. Grant, H. P. WRIGHT.

On receipt of this message the House of Commons, which was still in session, adjourned. The low respiration and excessively high pulse were most alarming symptoms, and it was generily agreed that they indicated an early end.

Great dissatisfaction has existed from the first over the meager character of the bulletin, and a prominent medical man voiced this opinion to-day in conversation with your correspondent. All the bulleting gave favorable symptoms, but yet declared he was dying.

AT MIDNIGHT.

Dr. Wright when seen at midnight after the final consultation for the day and the issue of the last bulletin, stated that the marvelous vital forces which have enabled the Premier to so long maintain his struggle for life are undergoing a process of slow but sure decay. He passed a far better day than yesterday, but there was no real indication of permanent improvement. His condition has from first to last confirmed the diagnosis taken on the day he was stricken with paralysis. The end may come at any time. The condition of the patient at midnight was simply this—no hope.

suitation, and entertains a more noperary view of Sir John's condition than do your-self and Dr. Wright?" to which he answered: "There is no difference of opinion whatever between us in the Premier's case."

Premier's case."

The general opinion among doctors is that death will take place from heart failure, which, it is admitted, may in the patient's condition take place at any moment, or that a fresh stroke may occur and prove fatal.

Some of HIS LAST WORDS.

On Friday last Senator Sullivan, who has been one of Sir John's most intimate friends, went down to Earnseliffe and was admitted to see the Premier, who was then apparently recovering from the slight attack of paralysis of Wednesday and was feeling much better than on the preceding day. Sir John greeted his old friend cordially, and in the course of conversation referred to his illness, ridiculing the idea of paralysis, which the physicians had informed him was the nature of the atformed him was the nature of the at-tack. To show the Senator that there tack. To show the Senator that there was at all events no paralysis now, Sir John drew up his limbs and shot them out again, asking his visitor to note how he had full power over them. He complained of being asked to keep perfectly still, and keep his eyes closed, saying: "If I have to do that it will drive me insane." This to do that it will drive me insane." This will explain to some extent the difficulty, even the impossibility, of anyone prevailing on the aged leader to remain quiet during the critical days between the elections and last week. Dr. Sullivan congratulated him on feeling so much better and left him, shaking hands with him for what proved to be the last time.

what proved to be the last time.

A cablegram says Sir John Macdonald's lilness divides with the baccarat scandal public attention. Mr. W. H. Smith, in the House of Commons, said: "Sir John Macdonald is a man who, however his public service may be viewed, has carned the respect of all who knew the services he has rendered the empire. There can be but one feeling of deep sorrow that a life so valuable. respect of all who knew the services he has rendered the empire. There can be but one feeling of deep sorrow that a life so valuable seems about to end." Sir William Vernon Harcourt, Stavely Hill and Joseph Chamberlain joined the tribute to Sir John Macdonald. The House generally showed keen aympathy with Canada.

The Daily Chronicle devotes the first leader to Sir John Macdonald, and speaks highly of his services to the Empire. It says the choice of leader lies between Sir Chas. Tupper and Sir John Thompson. Sir Chas. Tupper is still in Vienna and gives no sign of an early reture.

London, June 2.—Continuing his address to the court in the notorious faccarac case, Sir Edward Clarke commented on the fact that it was not until Sept. 10, 1890, the third day of baccarat-playing, that the slightest suspicion was breathed in regard to the plaintiff, when the latter gave Lord Coventry an absolute denial of the charges made against him, and later redenied these charges before the Prince of Wales and Gen. Owen Williams. Sir Edward then read the much-talked-of document which Sir William Gordon Cumming signed after the discovery of his alleged cheating at cards, and in which he undertook, as the price of his fellow-players' silence on the subject, never again to play cards. Sir Edward here said Sir William Gordon Cumming had made a great mistake in signing this document, but he explained that the plaintiff had allowed himself to be persuaded by his old friends, Gen. Owen Williams and Lord Coventry, hoping that in so doing he would avoid the scandal which his friends seemed to dread. Sir William Gordon Cumming, Gen. Owen Williams and Lord Coventry were all members of the turf club and they (Gen. Williams and Lord Coventry) were all members of the turf club and they (Gen. William and Lord Coventry) were all members of the turf club and they (Gen. William and Lord Coventry) would not have allowed the plaintiff to have remained a member of that club if they believed the charges brought against him. Mr. Clarke concluded by making a brilliant and passionate appeal to the jury on behalf of his client, who, he claimed, was plainly the victim of circumstances and of a false desire to avoid a scandal which would implicate his hosts at Trambycroft and his old friends who played baccarat with him there. Sir William further testified that on the second night of the baccarat games at Tranby Croft, on Sept. 5, 1890, the Prince of Wales was banker and that Mr. Arthur Stanley Wilson won five 'coups' running, which Sir William Gordon Cumming thought was very good 'for a novice.' "At the end of the game," the plaintiff continued, "the Prince of Wales laughingly said: 'Cumming, how came you to win so much?'—referring to the fact that I had won £225 in Itwo nights' play. To this I replied: 'Well, sir, I could not help winning with such luck,' showing the prince a card on which I kept marked, under the headings of 'banker' and 'player,' the exact number of times which the banker or player had wen during the evening's play.''
