And I sincerely trust that no battalion in the army will ever suffer what we did that day. It is not many regiments that have been called to man both the back and front, as we who were left, of our two front line companies had to do for thirty-six hours, after we had been surrounded. Then ammunition gave out and we had no food. Then came the dash to the support trench, nine hundred yords, where our other two hundred yards, where our other two Hall.
