

The Conference has agreed that the nations should establish a permanent international body to perform these functions to be called The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. It has been agreed that the Bank should assist in providing capital through normal channels at reasonable rates of interest and for long periods for projects which will raise the productivity of the borrowing country. There is agreement that the Bank should encourage the member countries to make their own contribution of capital to the Bank and share with the borrowing country in guaranteeing such loans. The Conference has agreed on the powers and resources which the Bank must have to carry out the obligations which the member countries must assume, and has recommended that the Bank should be established in accordance with the terms of the proposals formulated at the Conference for the establishment of the Bank. The proposals are now submitted in accordance with the terms of the Conference for consideration of the governments and people of the countries which have submitted their own contributions to the Bank.

The Conference has recommended that in carrying out the policies of the Bank special consideration should be given to the needs of the countries which have suffered from economic depression and instability. The proposals formulated at the Conference for the establishment of the Bank are now submitted in accordance with the terms of the Conference for consideration of the governments and people of the countries which have submitted their own contributions to the Bank.

The Conference has agreed that the nations should establish a permanent international body to perform these functions to be called The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. It has been agreed that the Bank should assist in providing capital through normal channels at reasonable rates of interest and for long periods for projects which will raise the productivity of the borrowing country. There is agreement that the Bank should encourage the member countries to make their own contribution of capital to the Bank and share with the borrowing country in guaranteeing such loans. The Conference has agreed on the powers and resources which the Bank must have to carry out the obligations which the member countries must assume, and has recommended that the Bank should be established in accordance with the terms of the proposals formulated at the Conference for the establishment of the Bank.

II. The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development

It is the purpose of the Bank to assist in the reconstruction and development of the countries which have suffered from economic depression and instability. The Bank should assist in providing capital through normal channels at reasonable rates of interest and for long periods for projects which will raise the productivity of the borrowing country. There is agreement that the Bank should encourage the member countries to make their own contribution of capital to the Bank and share with the borrowing country in guaranteeing such loans. The Conference has agreed on the powers and resources which the Bank must have to carry out the obligations which the member countries must assume, and has recommended that the Bank should be established in accordance with the terms of the proposals formulated at the Conference for the establishment of the Bank.

The Conference has agreed that the nations should establish a permanent international body to perform these functions to be called The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. It has been agreed that the Bank should assist in providing capital through normal channels at reasonable rates of interest and for long periods for projects which will raise the productivity of the borrowing country. There is agreement that the Bank should encourage the member countries to make their own contribution of capital to the Bank and share with the borrowing country in guaranteeing such loans. The Conference has agreed on the powers and resources which the Bank must have to carry out the obligations which the member countries must assume, and has recommended that the Bank should be established in accordance with the terms of the proposals formulated at the Conference for the establishment of the Bank.

The Conference has further agreed that the nations should establish a permanent international body to perform these functions to be called The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. It has been agreed that the Bank should assist in providing capital through normal channels at reasonable rates of interest and for long periods for projects which will raise the productivity of the borrowing country. There is agreement that the Bank should encourage the member countries to make their own contribution of capital to the Bank and share with the borrowing country in guaranteeing such loans. The Conference has agreed on the powers and resources which the Bank must have to carry out the obligations which the member countries must assume, and has recommended that the Bank should be established in accordance with the terms of the proposals formulated at the Conference for the establishment of the Bank.