

Finally, as alluded to earlier in this chapter, the movement toward the creation of a single European market involves very substantial policy and regulatory coordination among the various European nations.