Shabby Pair of Gloves Ruins Otherwise Faultless Attire.

DARK BLUE FOR SPRING

Girdle Fasteners, Dagger Shaped Exploit Various Stones.

The accessories of dress count so much they must be immaculate and unless something unique is continuiously launched Dame Fashion is restless and not pleased. They must ever suit the wearer, as unbecoming accessor "kills" a handsome costume. A shabb pair of gloves for instance, will ruin an otherwise faultless attire, while messy neckwear is unpardonable.

unprecedented popularity.

The waist line is "up" again today The waist line is "up" again today.
The mourning garb of the 1915 woman is fascinating. Jet is much worn. The black handbags are fashioned from rich silks, and lovely neckwear is made from fine black and white "footing." A mourning veil is edged with a nar row band of black monkey fur.

Glove bracelets are a very attractive innovation of the season. These are made in the old "gate" pattern, or jointed and fastened with a clasp worn over the glove at its upper edge.
They hold it in place on the arm, and are very dainty.

The new girdle fasteners are huge dagger-shaped brooches like the shawl pins of our grandmothers. These exploit topazes, amethysts and opals as well as all the precious stones.

y John A. MacLaren, one of The World's Staff Correspondents with the Cana-dian Expeditionary Force. WINCHESTER, England, Dec. 21.— We hope to spend New Year's Day in the trenches. It will be a glorious way to celebrate; a splendid beginning way to care of 1915."

A stocky little khaki clad private with a "P.P.C.L.I." red badge on his with a "P.P.C.L.I." red badge on his shoulders was leading us thru the crowded streets of this city to where Canada's crack regiment was encamped. He spoke enthusiastically about leaving for France. The city which is full of history, a notable castle and college, was also choked with fog. It had been raining during the morning and in the afternon a typical English mist lay like a heavy cloud over the streets. The dim gas lights were hardly distinguishable.

"Lots of soldiers in this town" said

"Lots of soldiers in this town" said some one.

"Well, I should say so" replied the private. "The burg is full of them. Seventy-five thousand of us fellows are camped in the outskirts and nearly all regulars, just back from China, India and other places. They have been relieved by territorials. Ninety per cent. of the people in the streets are in khaki."

The private was indeed correct. Soldiers owned the city.

Some Fine Outfits.

"We're going tomorrow" he continled. "The boys are going to celebrate tonight. They are so happy to quit training in the muck and rain. There are some of our fellows across the street. See they are with a bunch of Argyles. We are brigaded with regulars you know, Argyles, Shropshires and another regiment just back from India.
All in our division are of the permanent force except us. But believe me, the Princess Pats are some fine outfit. We can stick with any of them." He led us up a long narrow street which twisted and turned between lowancient buildings looking as the they had become tired of standing so long and wanted to fall over and have a much needed rest. Finally we emerguntil we could see the ancient college and another old stone pile that may

Preparing to Leave. There was every indication that division was moving out. They were going somewhere. The most likely selves along progressive lines. The place was Southampton and then Motor transports, one after life. They walk and ride a great deal another, the engines of which sounded and work in the fields as successfully like those of aeroplanes, rolled along the road. Heavy wagons, each drawn by two teams of horses and two men s little people of Belgium, who are mounted, rumbled by, loaded with the eat agriculturists and very prospose.

The state of the state tion. One naturally wondered how collisions were avoided. The road was so narrow, the lights so dim and the fog so heavy.

But there were no signs of activity in the lines of the Princess Pats. That is as far as moving is concerned. The men were just in from a hard after-noon's work. They had just been dismissed after manoeuvering over the hills and downs which surround Winchester. Their clothes were saturated, their boots and puttees muddy and their faces bespattered. But the men were entirely accustomed to it. Besides soldiering was an old game to most of them. Their faces beamed with pleasure because the day's work was done. And were't they going to France tomorrow? Two began to wrestle in the muck and slush and when one was placed on his knees there was a yell for mercy. "For the love of Mike have a heart cried he. "I never did like bathing." His chum let him up after he had promised to be good and then they walked away to their tent, arm in arm "Any truth in the story that you're going tomorrow"? an officer was asked Men are Happy.

"Oh, we've been going tomorow for a week" he answered. "We never know. We may leave tonight or next year. But we're ready. Our supplies are all packed. The men think they're happy as school boys, and believe me the officers are no different. It would be great if we could be in the fight in

As we were talking to the officer the noise of transports on the road could be heard—the whir of the engines and the thud of the horses' feet. "Yes, that division moving is ours," said the officer. "Of course the infantry is the last to go. I guess there is every chance of our going very shortly.' As we were leaving the camp the men were lining up for their evening they went to their tents to eat where they also sleep.

"Seeing that this is our last night here we should have a feast," one was overheard saying to a brother priv-ate. "Never mind Billy, we'll celebrate properly in Berlin." On the morning following the regiment actually moved. When reveille sounded the men rolled out of their blankets and greeted another wet day very soon they were out on their regular before-breakfast marathon. Half an hour of the "double" and they were ready for nourishment. Off to Southampton. The fall-in sounded and the men turned out in heavy marching order. Rifles and kits were inspected and they marched away. Third class carriages filled with the joyful throng./in know that they were from Canada. The Maple Leaf cap badge was not in evidence. It has been discarded in favor of another.
