Principal Carr of Winchester school presided, and an enthusiastic welcome was given to the new minister of ber, 1916. In England he was in hoseducation. In introducing Dr. Cody the coming among them as something that had never before occurred in the history of any present. Principal Fraser expressed the pleasure of the gathering and assured Dr. Cody that he had the confidence and would have the service of all present.

fidence and would have the service of all present.

In replying Dr. Cody said he found it difficult to express his thanks, and his best work would be to try that he might in some degree live up to the hopes and expectations that had been formed in his regard. There would, he said, be no advance unless the work of himself and teachers was work in common. A general could not conduct a campaign by himself, nor by the help of a staff of experts alone.

Referring to the rules and regulations governing things educational, the audience was told that arrangements were under way for a revision of those regarding the public and separate schools. Some, said Dr. Cody, thought that teachers were made for the sake of regulations instead of the reverse. He hoped that they would never defy the machinery at the cost of the living product, Promotion of Pupils.

Going on to the subject of promotion from the primary to the secondary schools, Dr. Cody described the method by which an option was given by substituting recommendation by the principal of the school for the entrance examination. The object in doing this had been to lighten recommendation by the principal of the school for the entrance examination. The object in doing this had been to lighten pressure, but it had not always worked out so. Outside of Toronto the idea had not been largely adopted because pressure out the sure could be brought to bear upon the principal, and the teachers in most cases had preferred to take shelter in the examination. He asked for the nind of his audience as to whether it would be well to go back to the old entrance or the refer the alternate system or careful the alternate system.

well to go back to the old entrance or to retain the alternate system, or again, to retain the old system, together with a recommendation. He, for his part, did not think it would be well to do way with the examination altogether.

Regarding the principle of examination, Dr. Cody said some examiners seemed to think, the idea was to find out what the child did not know. He would hate to be put to a test to find out his standing in this respect. The idea of examinations, to his mind, was to see if children had got a grip of the main things they had been taught.

Teaching of History.

On the subject of teaching history in the primary schools Dr. Cody spoke in no uncertain tone. It was, he said, the one great vehicle thru which the finest ideals and absolutely essential lessons could be taught. A syllabus containing suggestions as to the teaching of the subject was being issued. He was not so sure that he shared the horror some had as to the learning of dates. He thought it well that the children should learn many good things even if they did not understand logic, which they might acquire at a later date. He thought that if some of the fiendish problems as to the measuring up of carpets and walls were cut ing up of carpets and walls were cut.

Resignation of President is Reluctantly Accepted When He Insists.

A surprise was sprung at last night's meeting of the Parkdale branch of the G. W. V. A. when Major J. H. Bell, president, tendered his resignation. In doing so, he explained that at the provincial convention he had been elected provincial vice-president, and he had found that his health would not permit him to continue the two offices, especially, as he pointed out, he had not received the support he should have from Comrade J. O. Scott, vice-president. At first the resignation was refused, and a resolution extending to him three months leave, was passed, but finally, as he explained that his resignation must be considered as final, it was accepted with much regret.
