NO REASON FOR HYSTERIA.

HERE is no excuse for hysteria because of the Government's nnouncement that selective conscripion is to be enforced in Canada, especially when the country must assume that this is the only step compatible with national honor. The demonstrations in Quebec, designed as they are to show antipathy to the move, are premature, to say the least. The Government has not yet announced the details of its plans. Nor is there any indication that the term "selective" is not honestly chosen. Canadians, as a whole, want to see the Prussians beaten; and they want to see the energies of the country directed in such a way as to bring this about. The Governnent's selective policy may call for certain men to go to the front, for others to equip munitions plants and or others to man the farms. If the division of labor is wisely made the result should be greater efficiency a

every point in the war game

Many good and loyal people believe hat the main energies of Canada should be directed toward furnishing food supplies: perhaps this is the case. Others think that this country has sent abroad all the men she can spare; his is a point to be decided by experts having in mind the needs of the war Britain failed to secure an adequate number of men without conscription. It would have been a fine thing if Canada had met the call voluntarily, but apparently there was something lacking. Now it is proposed to find the additional 25 per cent required by com-

In Ontario it is claimed Quebec has done its duty; the demonstrations RECRUITING STILL NEEDED Quebec would appear to bear this And if this is the case Ontario will demand that the selective feature Quebec to time. Until the full intentions of the Government are known the public should suspend judgment.

In this regard it might be well to remember that those opposed to any measure are more likely to send protests than are those in favor to forward word of their support. It is also more than probable that on the conscription question, advice to members is more tikely to come from executive committees than from the masses of the people, and these committees are not always representative of public feeling. RECRUITING STILL NEEDED

THERE is an inclination in many quarters to slacken recruiting efforts since the announcement that conscription was to be applied in Canada, and this is one of the worst mistakes that could be made.

During last week, reports from all corners of the Dominion told of a rush of volunteers, men eager to get into khaki before such action becomes compulsory. So far so good, but these have come without special work on the part of recruiters, who take it for granted the proposed measure will be enforced.

There is a possibility, remote as it may be, that the idea of making service compulsory will be abandoned, or whole a different. "Think of me falling in love with a red-headed, snub-nosed bluffer like that," he said aloud to himself as he walked home that evening.

Miss Winfield on her way home from the party smiled and mused:

"I don't think that young man feels so clever as he did."

Was here the making of a marriage or a tragedy? Cupid was busy somewhere else and didn't answer.

Two days later Mr. Glenn entered a store to purchase a necktie. He was looking over the assortment when Miss Winfield entered the store, marched straight to his counter, elbowed him aside and said to the salesman:

"I want a red tie for a boy."

"Yes'm—just a minute."

"I want a red tie for a boy."

"And that's all you ever will know her, judging from the look she gave you."

"Guess you know her?"

"Slightly."

"And that's all you ever will know her, judging from the look she gave you."

"I'll have to stand it," smiled the young man.

A week later Mr. Glenn stepped into a railroad ticket office to inquire about the trains to Belle Harbor The ticket man had just told him there were four a day when Miss Winfield came tripping in, and/said:

"I want to know right away about the trains to Belle Harbor."

"Wasn't doing it to bother you, eh?" queried the ticket man.

"Oh, no; though perhaps she thought she was."

And when Mr. Glenn left the office he knew that he and Miss Winfield were to travel down to Belle Harbor on the same train. He was to go to a hotel and she to relatives.

At 3 o'clock they met at the train and both started back in surprise.

He extended his hand to assist her up the steps of the coach and was snubbed for it.

The only seat in the coach for him was right behind her, and after a few minutes she asked a man opposite to change with her.

When Belle Harbor was reached Mr. Glenn would have assisted Miss Win field from the coach, but she turne from his hand.

The parting came at the station, but it brought no sighs of regret. Mr. Glenn had his auto sent up and began to explore the country. Miss Winfield had her auto sent up and began to make the acquaintance of the highways. What was it that prevented them from meeting for the next ten days? Then one morning the snubber took
