Early Days Around London

City Over 60 Years Ago.

Pioneer Times.

It is pure gold when one happens upon one of the old settlers who remembers, as Mrs. Robb does, the day and date of the doings of three score and five years ago. She was a little girl of 11 when she landed in the woods where London now stands, on 2nd of August, 1832." They had left Glasgow "on the 20th of May," and were therefore well-nigh three months journeying. It was a little before even the elder Proudfoot's time, and the strangers, good Scottish Presbyterians Miles and Gen. Meriam both agree bath to a Baptist service held in a little log house. It was an August effect by the Canadian minister of the day and early, and they found the Later advices than those received last December, when the expedition was decided upon, indicate, he says, that the miners are in no danger of suffering and he thinks that the great ways of the Scottish Sabbath. Within, people mostly clustered about the door there was a great fire, and two huge bake-kettles hung over it. The contents of the bake-kettles were for the feast that followed the service; for the early settlers were hospitable, and rushed out of the epaulement in purmany of the hearers had come far.

Nor did the hot fire on the August day

ment a splendid charge was executed discommode anyone. They were thirsty for the Gospel, and the preacher in noon several more from the New. By and by, when they had taken up land on the Proof Lize, the father of the family opened a Sabbath school in the log school house. There was no "International" scheme of lessons in those days to fetter them. The school had a course of its own, and an admirable one, too. Besides the Scripture lesson, each scholar "said his verses" and a question from the shorter Catechism "with proofs." There was also a sermon read also, these frequently being repeated again in Gaelic. The children stayed through it all and "were always glad when the Sabbath came round again." The first elders of the Proof Line were ordained in a barn, Mr. Proud-foot, who had organized the congregation in February, 1833, and Mr. Frataking part. The two elders, Alexander Smith and James Fraser, were no mere figureheads. It was Mr. Smith,

Mrs. Robb's father, who in that same year went back to Scotland and col-lected enough money to put up the frame church which served the congregation for many a day. Mr. Fraser it was who rendered the sermons into Gaelio in the school house. He was the precentor as well. Mr. Skinner, who came after Mr. Proudfoot as the minister at Proof Line, used to say that when Mr. Fraser sang he "could feel the dirl of his voice under his feet in the pulpit." Basswood logs split in two and smoothed with the adze served as benches in the church till the struggling settlers were able to pay for betthat they could not pay for it, there was no stove in the church. Through four long winters, two in the barn and two in the church, they worshipped without a fire, and worshiped joyfully. Proof Line has had a succession of godly and able men-Dr. Milligan served his novitiate there-but surely those were among its best privilege to have a place to worship in at all and ministers to preach to them that comfortable seats and a fire were trifles not worth a thought! -R. Experiences of the Father of British War Correspondents.

Under the title of "Romance of War Corresponding," Today gave in a recent issue an account of some of the Russell, who has been, not inappropricampaign in which the special correspondent figured. Sir William Russell is not only the doyen of living specials, he is the only one of them who has received from her majesty the honor of knighthood. Seeing that he represented the premier journal at "the front," it is all the more remarkable that his letters from headquarters should have been marked by a rare quality of fearlessness. He laid bare the miseries which our soldiers were compelled to undergo through the grossest mismanagement. "Within eight miles of them," he says, "are clothes, food, materials for house-building, fuel, and many other comforts; but the soldiers have been in rags, have been placed on half rations, have been reduced to burrow in the ground for shelter, and driven to the utmost extremity to obtain firewood scribed in the Washington Post by a from a surface of land saturated with writer who received the story from the rain. There have been guns and ammunition in abundance at Balaclava; while the siege has been interrupted cheerily along the conduit road on his for want of guns and ammunition," and he eloquently describes the bloody struggle of Nov. 5, 1854, as "the mem-orable battle of Inkerman, with its surprise, so little honorable to our general and the officers of his staff; its combats, so glorious to our soldiers; and its results, so fatal to the enemy, so memorable to us." A principal outcome of Dr. Russell's plain-spoken war letters during 1854-55 was the opening of a Times subscription for the avowed purpose of "supplying the shortcomings of the constituted authorities." The late Mr. Macdonald, who was also on the spot, administered this timely relief, distributing to the suffering troops "bales of clean clothing, enormous quantities of wine, sago, rice, tobacco and everything that could minister to their necessities or their comforts." One of the late Gen. Gordon's companions on the first visit of the Soudan was Mr. Russell (son of Sir W. H. Russell). For the next

"Never can I forget," he writes, "the sort of agony with which I witnessed those (Prussians) who first came out on the plateau, raising their heads, and looking around for an enemy; while, hidden from view, a thick blue band of French infantry was awaiting them, and a brigade of cavalry was ready on their flank below. The onset was not to be withstood. The Prussians were on the Prussians before which the for the Gospel, and the his shirt sleeves was earnest.

They were steady soldiers who pulled trigger there. Down came horse and man; the array was utterly ruined. There was left in front of that deadly infantry but a heap of white and gray horses—a terrace of dead and dying and dismounted men and fiying troopers, who tumbled at every instant. More total dissipation of a bright pageant could not be." While, of the frightful scene presented during the defense of the main position at Gravelotte, Dr. Russell wrote: "The French stood their ground and died; the Prussians moved ever forward and This for an hour or two, that might have been ages, so ceaseless was the slaughter.
