USING THAMES WATER LONDON MOTORISTS. MAY HELP CONSERVE THE SPRING SUPPLY You Are Too Lax in Obeying

G. M. Buchanan To Make a Report On Subject.

Report on the prospects of using river water in some of the larger factories and institutions to conserve the supply of spring water for drinking purposes will likely be presented to the public utilities commission by General-Manager Buchanan within the near future. The commission as a body has taken no action along this line.

It has been known for some years.

The delive list of offenders against the complete the commission as a body has been decreased almost 50 per cent in the last three weeks. It has been known for some years that the present water supply was not adequate, and investigations have been carried on continually to discover new sources of supply. While it is quite possible that these could be obtained in sufficient number to meet the immediate sufficient number to meet the immediate needs of the city, it is certain that if London grows to the extent expected, possibly to a population of 150,000, it will be hopeless to meet the immediate needs of the city with spring that the control of the city with spring the control of the city with spring that the control of the city with spring that the control of the city with spring the control of the city with spring that the control of the city with spring the control of the city with spring that the city with spring the city with spri

This nesting of the eagle, the first to be noted in our county for many years, was well known to the members of the McIlwraith Ornithological Club, and it had been visited by them on various occasions. Someone suggested that it might be well to make the pestling public, with a plea for protection, but it was thought better not to do so, and the birds were encouraged in an incognito. The results have been fatal, however, and the nest of this notable and spectacular bird is likely to be a thing of the past.
