SECOND EDITION. THE GRAY HORSE STORY.

A CHICAGO MAN TELLS WHAT HE SAW ON THE NIGHT OF MAY 4.

He stood in a doorway opposite the Crown Hotel, and saw Dr. Cronin enter a carriage drawn by a gray horse. He saw four other gray horses, and the driver of each of them, in fact, saw every detail of the scene.

It was plain from the attorney's manner that he regarded Budenbender as his star performer. Budenbender, answering Forrest's sharp questions, related how, about 7:15 o'clock on the evening of May 4, he was standing in the doorway of Fred Jacob's cigar store on North street, nearly opposite the Conklin residence, smoking a cigar.

This much satisfied Mr. Forrest, who sat down, his face illuminated by a rapturous grin, which he turned upon every lawyer at the state's table. This smile faded, however, before George J. Ingham had proceeded far with the cross-examination. Mr. Ingham evidently appreciated that he had answered Budenbender aggressively. He first found out that he came to Chicago in August, 1888, that he lived with Fred Simons, an advertising agent, at 490 Clark street, and that he, Budenbender, engaged in the business of soliciting advertising for several months. He claimed to have known Dr. Cronin because several persons had pointed out the doctor to him. He could not, however, remember the name of one of those persons. His purpose in visiting Jacob's cigar store was to meet Frank Jolly, Frank Shrock and William Meador, employees of the water office. Finding that they were not in he stepped to the door and gazed idly up the street, when his attention was riveted on the horse and buggy. He forgot to state that there was another horse and buggy in front of the Windsor Theatre at the time, though probably because Mr. Ingham failed to ask him about it.

SECOND EDITION. AN IMPORTANT INDUSTRY.

The Acadia Pottery Company at Crookville.

The Acadia Pottery Company purchased the extensive Pottery buildings and plant at Crookville some months ago, and now have them in full operation. A Gazette reporter visited the works yesterday in company with the manager and was there introduced to Mr. John Cunningham, superintendent of the manufacturing department of the business.

The Pottery is situated on the corner of the Red Head and Crookville roads, right on to a fine deposit of red clay which is quite extensively used in the manufacture of different lines of ware. The building, which is in the form of an ell, and respectively one, two and three stories high, covers a ground area of over 100 feet in length by about 40 in width.

The lower floor of the building at one end is used for handling the clay in its first stage of manufacture, and at the other for kilns and for packing and shipping the finished goods. The buildings are well arranged and equipped with a fair quantity of labor saving machinery to which it is the intention of the company to add immediately, all the very latest appliances.

The work of the potter is quite interesting. The clay after it has been dug out of the bank is first "slipped" that is washed. It is first placed in a wooden trough where it is thoroughly saturated with water and afterwards strained through a fine sieve into a pan or slip kiln where the surplus water is evaporated and the clay left at a consistency at which it can be easily worked. After it has been "slipped" the clay is taken to log mills and there thoroughly ground and mixed. All impurities or hard lumps have by this time been removed and the clay is ready for "wedging" which simply means its turning over and over on a flat table until it is ready for use.

Supposing it is intended to make any thing of a circular form the clay is weighed and then handed to the potter who places it upon the flat dice of the wheel. A boy turns the crank and in a short space of time the unsightly lump of clay thrown on the wheel has under the deft work of the potter's fingers been formed into a jar, a crock, a jug or some similar shape.

Goods that are oval in shape are formed in moulds. The slip is first worked out into a flat strip and then laid over the mould and by the potter's hands worked into the proper shape. It is then allowed to dry sufficiently to enable it to be lifted from the mould without breaking.

The pots and such articles are stamped in moulds made for the purpose and are known to the trade as bookbinding ware. These are the three processes which all articles of clay pass before they are made for the oven.

They are afterwards slipped or dropped in a liquid which when they are burned lightens over glasses them. A peculiar feature of this glass is that the cream colored material used on the inside of crocks is white before it is burned, that for the outside is a bright red which under the influence of the heat is rendered perfectly colorless. All articles made of clay are slipped before burning, to render them more durable, and to prevent water from soaking through. Bardsle is a class of ware that is being made from different colors of clay and looks exceptionally neat. It is extensively used in the manufacture of pie plates and dishes for use in the oven.

After the ware is dried so as to be easily handled it is piled into the kiln and burned until it is perfectly hard. There are two kilns in the pottery.

In addition to the different wares mentioned the Acadia Pottery company make several designs of tobacco pipes, including the famous Woodstock.
