Triple play for McGowan

Gary McGowan was appointed for his third year director of CJSR, student radio on campus.

His staff is also returning intact for the most part. McGowan says the station will be more free this year to work on programming now that a structure is firmly established.

McGowan hopes to broadcast full time on CJSR QC FM next year, and to broadcast in Friday's several of the HUB lounges.

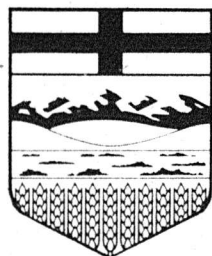

Becoming a regular station is a long term project, is too expensive at present, McGowan. "We would need full time station management," he said, "as well as studio expansion. Right now everything is frozen while the students' union studies building priorities." McGowan has his eye on the Gateway office for studio expansion.

McGowan says he is confident an FM station would be viable with the programming which CJSR now has. However, "we get nothing but platitudes from the students' union when I tell them how much money's involved they get scared."

McGowan is coming back for a third year because "it's an exciting place to work. It's unique in Edmonton — we have everything from rock to classical."
