Special Notice.

At the end of this year we will give 5 cts. for every 12 Outside Green Wrappers obtained from "STAFF-FOR'S LINIMENT". We will also give $10.00 to the person forwarding us the largest number and $5.00 to the 2nd largest. We will keep a record of every person forwarding us these wrappers from time to time and at the end of the year we will publish the names of the Winners. "STAFF-FOR'S LINIMENT" is the strongest and most penetrating Liniment for Rheumatism, Lumbago, Neuralgia and all ACHES and PAINS. Owing to the cost of Bottles and Ingredients used in the manufacturing of this Liniment, we have had to advance the price a little, but the bottle still remains the same size. DR. F. STAFFORD & SON, St. John's, Nfld.

The Young Bennett.

The death in Paris, at the age of 37 years of James Gordon Bennett, proprietor of the New York Herald, removes one of the most commanding figures, and certainly the most unique personality in American Journalism. Mr. Bennett inherited the Herald from his father, but the great newspaper which has had international reputation for many years, reflected his own personality. He made it what it is by bold and brilliant strokes in news-gathering, or as somebody has said, "news-achieving". When at the age of just thirty years he assumed control of the Herald, he was the largest newspaper fortune in the world at that time. He proceeded to lead it towards the development of a new style in unique fashion.

His maxim was to win success by the use of money and of men, and to use both without stint. He expended millions of money in feats of enterprise and out of many of them reaped large profits. His achievements sometimes were of world importance. Such was the policy he inaugurated when as managing editor in 1870 he ordered Henry M. Stanley into the heart of Africa to find Livingstone, which when he sent the ill-fated Jeanette expedition to discover the North Pole; such when he joined in the laying of the Commercial Cable; all typical instances of enterprise to "make news" or further its transmission. In contrast with the personal journalism of the elder Bennett and Greeley type, the younger Bennett was one of the first to sound the impersonal note. He declared that his paper should become a sort of republic of which no man or party should hold control. From the first he refused to recognize "celebrities," as compared with "workers" on his staff, and it is related that even when Stanley came back from his triumph in Africa, young Bennett rewarded him with the mean assignment of "covering" the Tenderloin police district in New York. During his residence abroad, broken only by the unexpected arrival of the Bennett yacht in New York Harbor once every two or three years for a short stop, the editors in immediate control of the New York Herald kept a chair at their conference table, always vacant for the absent editor; one of his own ideas to keep his men imbued with the spirit that he was "boss," although several thousand miles away. The Herald, marked minutely with the names of the men who had written certain articles or news stories, was forwarded to him in Paris daily. He kept in touch with every detail of personnel and policy. Daily, or oftener, the cable from Paris, or wherever he might be sojourning in his yacht, brought the editor-in-chief's executive orders, for promotion or discharge, for compliment or reprimand, or sketch of general policies. His whims, amounting, his critics said, to eccentricities, were one of the most interesting angles of his personality. It is related that he dismissed a musical critic simply because "he was such a funny looking man," and put the financial editor in his place; and that a "copy" boy who ran into the pit of Mr. Bennett's stomach in the Herald office, received several dollars reward for his unusual haste. These and many instances like them were traditions of Herald employees. His was the greatest example in long distance editing in the history of journalism. Although he ruled with the rod of a despot in his own office he was not a great personal journalist, in the sense, that Greeley of the New York Tribune, Dana of the New York Sun, and Delane of the London Times were. Yet he was a very powerful factor in the newspaper world and, apart from his interesting feats in news gathering, probably the greatest service to his credit is that mentioned by the Boston Transcript, namely, in the opening up to newspaper readers the unknown corners of the earth and, especially in creating overseas an appetite for American news. This, we may well believe, was a forerunner of the part that the United States is now to play in the world affairs.

It used to be said that if the proprietor of the New York Herald should die at what a newspaper man calls an inconvenient hour—that is, between one and two a.m., New York time—in all probability his paper would be compelled to go to press without a comprehensive obituary notice of its owner. That was said because there was no "envelope" in the Herald archives labeled James Gordon Bennett, though there are 75,000 or more containing notes and clippings on the life and achievements of nobodies known only to a limited circle of friends. But Mr. Bennett did not die at an inconvenient hour; neither did he die "for the Herald." All the afternoon newspapers chronicled his death before news of it appeared in the journal which he himself owned—Halifax Chronicle.
