Proposed International Catholic Congress.

CHICAGO, Oct. 10.—Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, M. W. O'Brien, Detroit, and W. S. Onahan, of Chicago, a majority of the committee appointed at the American Catholic Congress at Baltimore last year to consider the project of holding an International Catholic Congress in Chicago in 1893, met at the Grand Pacific Hotel yesterday. They discussed the general scope and intent of the proposed International Congress, and appointed Mr. Onahan to draw up a declaration of the purposes of the meeting in 1893. The plan will be based on the congresses held this summer in Belgium, Germany and France.

Phobe Campbell's Confossion.

The recent murder trials have set people recalling reminiscences of fermer murders. Among others thus engaged is a correspondent who writes: "Did Phebe Campbell ever confess to the murder of her husband?" Inquiry from good authority tends to show that she never made a written confession of the deed, but that she made numerous statements acknowledging her guilt. She had made so many different statements of the affair that but few gave what she afterwards said credence. Previous to her execution she knowledging her guilt. She had made so many different statements of the affair that but few gave what she afterwards said credence. Previous to her execution she sent to the matron, the late Mrs. Doyle, word that she wanted to make a full confession. The Crown Attorney was communicated with, but for some reasons the confession was never taken. In her final statement she had implicated her paramour, Nelson Coyle, but her word went for almost nothing. In order to prove what she had said to be true the condemned woman consented to become a party to a scheme by which Coyle might incriminate himself. Phobe Campbell was conducted to his cell and talked to him of the crime with a reporter in the adjoining cell shorthanding the conversation. It was generally believed that sufficient evidence was found against the man Coyle, but when he came to trial the jury acquitted him.

carcitement had subsided, Capt. McAllister made an examination of the Remora's hold, and reported that the boat was not damaged, but was able to continue the voyage to Port Huron. The flames had been confined to the cargo, and had not burned into the boat's frame. Being thus reassured all but four of the passengers returned to the boat, many intending to stop at the Flats. The four passengers remaining on the Jessie were H. Davis and two children, of Moore, Ont., and J. T. R. Brown, an insurance agent, of Detroit, who were brought to Windsor.

"If the Jessie had been a mile farther away every soul on board the Remora would have been lost," said Mr. Brown, when seen by a reporter last night. "It was a very narrow escape, in fact it was providential. Let it be recorded that a Canadian captain came to the rescue of an American vessel, and fought brayely for the lives of the Let it be recorded that a Canadian captain came to the rescue of an American vessel, and fought bravely for the lives of the passengers and crew, while a large American barge passed without noting our distress. Capt. McAllister and crew stayed by the Remora until the last spark of fire was extinguished."

"Too much praise cannot be given the captain and crew of the tug Jessie," said Mr. Davis, "for their heroic efforts. They undoubtedly saved the lives of all on board. After the fire was out the tug was placed at the disposal of the Remora's passengers. I decided to return with my children rather than risk the seaworthiness of the Remora."

The fire occurred about six miles from the Flats. The Remora is owned by S. H. Davis & Co., of Detroit, and the Jessie by J. Nesbitt, of Sarnia.

The Thing for Weak Lungs.
[From the Evening Wisconsin.]

If those who have weak lungs would put their breathing organs through a course of daily exercise, filling them to the utmost with air, and expanding every cell without any violent straining, they would gradually increase their lung power, strengthen the circulation of the blood, improve their digestion and re-establish bodily vigor. Non-use produces atrophy, either in lungs or in muscles, and we should pay as much attention to lung gymnastics, so to speak, as we do to the exercise of the legs and arms. A half-used lung is more likely to be the seat of disease than a full and vigorous lung that is able to throw off germs and other foreign matter.

AT COST.

I find my Ordered Tailoring Department increased to such an extent that I require every inch of room on the first floor for Tweeds and Woolens. Consequently all Eoys' and Men's Furnishings must go at cost. This is not a clearing sale at the end of a season, but I am placing before the public a stock in the beginning of a season when they will require the goods. The above consists of the balance of R. Wallace's bankrupt stock, bought at 65c on the dollar, and over $3,000 worth of the finest new goods bought this season, under the most favorable circumstances, in the best markets. This is an opportunity for all to buy their Fall and Winter Furnishings at cost and under.
