Chilliwhack honey, in comb and refined, is a new feature. The B. C. Packing Co. of Vancouver, have a fine display of canned fruits, jams and jellies in glass, and also flavoring extracts. The Chilliwhack fruit cannery has also s good display. The Royal City Mills' exhibit of native woods, dressed and manufactured into doors and mantels, is a handsome showing. This has been secured for the Victoria show. The Howe Sound Slate Co. also make a fine showing in shingles, equal in color and grain to any eastern product.

The show of horses and cattle generally is fine, and altogether the Westminster exhibition is highly successful in every way, and enhanced in interest by the attractive programme of sports.

Great interest is being experienced in our churches. The Church of England is about to build a handsome place of worship. The Rev. Alexander Young, the new Presbyterian minister of the place, is drawing large numbers to hear him. As a preacher, he has few equals. Rev. Mr. Green and Mrs. Barrett are holding a very successful series of revival meetings in the Methodist church, and "those who come to scoff remain to pray."

The professional races to-morrow will bring thousands to Westminster from all parts, although the city is already crowded. O'Conner is the favorite, though many think Dutch, the Australian, will surprise everybody by winning. The four oarsmen are in splendid form, Hanlan especially.

There are numerous visitors from Victoria—a gratifying fact to the Westminsterites. The reception committee are looking after the guests in good shape. President Ker of Victoria is here, and will succeed in sending a large number of the finest exhibits to the Victoria show next week.

The Tolmie estate secured prizes for every entry made in horses, cattle and sheep. Sturdy took six prizes for Suffolk pigs. Perrin, Sturdy and Flett secured the majority of the prizes in poultry.

Perhaps for table, chairs and dancing stage is utilized also for sleeping purposes. They sleep in a great wadded coat, and, putting their arms into the long sleeves, fold it over them and go to sleep upon the floor, with a block of wood placed under the neck for a pillow. Perhaps the strangest sleeping place was one discovered a few years ago, when the police of Budapest found thirty persons of both sexes lying in a dirty but warm stream of water that flowed out of a mill. The water was shallow, and the vagrants had got into it for warmth, taking stones for pillows.

Coins of Brass and Tin.

When England was being made into mincemeat and blocks of real estate by the Saxons and Danes, silver and brass were in use as currency, but the Normans subsequently installed the aristo cratic metal and left the democratic cratic metal and left the democratic brass to take care of itself. Gold was first coined by Henry III., and copper made into British coin in 1672. Tin was used for coinage in 1680, and the national farthing was made of this Cambrian product with a stud of copper let in the center. In 1690 and 1691 tin half-pence were issued in considerable quantities. The only pure gold coins issued in English history were those of Henry III.

Despite all that has been done by the legislature and the police for putting down gaming in those forms in which they can take cognizance of it, it is now practiced, under conditions which preclude the interposition of the law and its emissaries, to an extent and in a manner which would have astonished even the veteran frequenters of Crockeven the veteran frequenters of Crock-ford's and the Cocoa Tree in their palmy even the veteran frequenters of Crockford's and the Cocoa Tree in their palmy days. It is true, says the London World, that cards have supplanted dice as the leading instruments of speculation, and that baccarat instead of hazard is the pastime principally in vogue, But for all practical purposes the first are not less effective than the second in ruining fortunes and reputations, and lend themselves quite as readily to the transference of large sums of money.

In many respects, indeed, the gambling of the present is far more open to objection than the gambling of the past. In the old time, when gaming-houses, whether in the shape of clubs or ordinary houses, were tolerated, high play was for the most part restricted to men. No doubtes few notorious women of rank and fashion were in the habit of playing high at one another's own houses. But nearly all the gambling was practiced at gaming-clubs, and to them women were not admitted. In addition to this, no man either belonged to a gaming-club or entered except with the full intention of joining in the diversion there provided for him, and, whatever his luck might be, he incurred the risks to which he was exposed deliberately, and of malice prepense. At gaming-clubs publicity generally, if not invariably, insured fair play, and, save in the way of loans from the proprietary, there was then no credit. Between the gamesters themselves every transaction was a ready-money one, and thus, while win-

Feeple Whe Steep on the Fiore, in Chairs, or standing Up.

Several persons, from some cause or other, have resolved at various perfods not to sleep in hed. Perhaps the individual who-kept to his resolution the longest, says Spare Moments, was Christopher Pevitt, of York, who died in 1798, aged ninety-three. He was a carver and guilder by trade, but during the earlier part of his life served in the army. Lewis saw no reason in that fact why he should trouble himself, as New Orleans was a big place, and many children besides himself were born there. However, one day he did speak to Michell and mentioned the coincidence of the same place of nativity. Each asked the other if he knew certain people there, and when the names of the mas-

Patient Submission to the Agent of God—Bribe-Taking Judges.

The opposition offered by Rizs Pasha and others of the higher officials to judicial reform in Egypt is usually set down in this country to corrupt motives, writes a contributor in the Spectator. They want bribes, it is said, for protecting unworthy suitors, or they desire the opportunity of oppressing their enemies, or their dependents' enemies, through the agency of the police. The charge is probably true in part, most orientals desiring irregular rewards, just as Bacon did, and thirsting for irregular power and the abject deference and sense of authority which irregular power speedilyproduces; but they could, if they were perfectly articulate, make a better defense for themselves than Englishmen imagine—a defense, too, in which the suitors before them would cordially concur. There are just Asiatcordially concur. There are just Asiatics as well as unjust, though they are usually few, and Asiatics, too, whom no man could bribe; and as they and their suppliants would resist Mr. Scott's reference as at the country of the coun usually few, and Asiatics, too, whom no man could bribe; and as they and their suppliants would resist Mr. Scott's reforms as stiffly as their corrupt compatitiots it may be of some interest to a few observers of human nature to state the reasons why. The popular notion that Asiatics to not care for justice, or even positively dislike it, is of course without foundation. The approval of justice is almost as instinctive as the idea of difference between right and wrong, and an Asiatic submits more humbly to a just sentence than a European. The agent of God, he thinks, has found him out, which it was his especial business in this world to do, and which is evidence, among other things, of the reality of his commission, and vindictiveness on that account would be only a new crime—an idea asserted by English jailkeepers to be also entertained by the convicts in their charge.

The idea that an Asiatic does not desire a just decision on the merits of the case as between plaintiff and defendant, or accuser and accused, is utterly without foundation. The only difference in that respect between the races is that the Asiatic is not convinced of the inherent equality of men, holding that the great and those invested with sanctity ought to have some favor shown them, and that as regards fitting punishments, he belongs to the fifteenth century and would have no kind of feeling about torture, mutilation, or breaking on the wheel. The highest Egyptian expositor of the law did, indeed, in this very discussion, lay it down as a cardinal dogma that a brigand should suffer the amputation of his hands—a penalty which no European government dare attempt to inforce for any offense whatever.

or sitting in a chair, but always with his clothes on. He lived entirely alone and was his own housekeeper, and seldom admitted anyone into his hab itation. Among other articles which which he left strict injunctions should be interred with him.

A pedestrian named Ernest Mensen, who flourished in the third decade of this century and who once ran from Calcutta to Constantinople in fifty-nine days when employed as a courier, took mistic view of the proceeding. When the candidates were all placed, their friend, the fireman, counted "one, two, three," and an assistant turned on the tank. About a ton of water struck those poor Indians all at once. For a second they seemed held by the deluge itself and stood motionless, but the next, with soul transfixing shrieks, they started. They did not run nor fly, for that would not have been half fast enough; they just hit about three high places on the plain and were several miles away.
