

Scriptures. Two copious indexes, tabular analysis, and marginal notes greatly facilitate the labour of consultation and study. These 700 closely printed pages furnish the best introduction to the critical examination of the Scriptures with which we are acquainted.

Anglo-Israel; or, the British Nation the Lost Tribes of Israel. By the REV. W. H. POOLE. 8vo, pp. 82. Toronto: Sold at Methodist Book Rooms. Price 25 cents.

The problem of the present identity of the Ten Tribes of Israel has long possessed a strange fascination for Biblical students. Brother Poole presents in these eighty pages an elaborate argument,—philological, Biblical, historical, ethnographic, and heraldic, in favour of their identity with the British nation. Certainly many of these evidences are highly interesting and curious, as, for instance, the derivation of "Saxons" from, by slight modification, "Isaac;" the fulfilment, as alleged, of many Scriptural prophecies in the British nation; the existence of what might be called "Jewish quarterings" in the Royal Standard of England, and many other striking coincidences. The essay is instinct with patriotic sentiments, and whether one accepts the theory or not, he will find much food for thought in the argument.

The London Quarterly Review for January, 1879. Wesleyan Conference Office, London.

This number concludes the fifty-first volume of this sterling quarterly. The articles are reviews of Olver's Fernley Lecture of 1878, and of Stanley's "Through the Dark Continent;" a hopeful paper on the Future of the United States, written with evident command of the subject; interesting accounts of Cyprus, its history, and its prospects; and of Turkey and its people. A discriminative estimate of Lessing's place in Literature, and a review of Dr. Graetz History of the Jews, conclude the contributed articles. The editorial book notices, which are full and varied, are, as usual, among the most interesting portions of this review, the literary and critical ability of which do credit to the higher thought and scholarship of English Methodism.

Social Heroism, by F. LOUISE MORSE, and Broken Bonds, by "FELIX MAX," Toronto.

The first of these stories, by a Toronto lady, won the first of four prizes offered for a Temperance tale, and the other, one of the other prizes. The scene of Miss Morse's story is laid partly in Toronto. It is written with much taste and literary skill, and sets forth the social perils of the drinking customs of the day and the moral heroism required to overcome them. The second story is of another phase of the same fertile theme. They are both calculated to promote sound temperance principles and practice.

The National Repository begins the new volume with a timely and well-illustrated article on Afghanistan by the editor, Rev. Dr. Curry, and one by Prof. Worman, on Old Colonial Days. A portrait and life-sketch of the late Dr. Hodge are also given.

The January number of Rose-Belford's Magazine has a noble Christmas poem by John Reade, our sweet Canadian singer. Prof. Goldwin Smith resumes his incisive Bystander papers, and J. L. Stewart has a pleasant chapter on Christmas literature.

Dr. Deems' Sunday Magazine begins the new year with a new and attractive cover and numerous illustrations. The present writer has the honour of opening the volume with an illustrated article on Christmas Carols. Dr. Deems' sermons are always admirable. The current one is on the Bible versus Spiritualism.

Scribner's Magazine and St. Nicholas fairly surpass themselves in beauty of illustration. They are clubbed at greatly reduced rates with this magazine. (See advertisement.)
