

Canadian Poultry Review.

DEVOTED TO POULTRY AND PET STOCK.

Vol. 4.

STRATHROY, ONTARIO, MARCH, 1881.

No. 4.

LIGHT BRAHMAS, as bred by J. F. Seriver, Montreal, Q.

Artificial Incubation.

BY WILLIAM HENRY THICK, 333 Gloucester St.,
Ottawa, Ont.

No VIII.

(Continued.)

"The facility of changing the situation of the shelves becomes a means of putting the basket in warmer or colder parts of the stove, according as the thermometer shews that the place they are actually in is either too cool or too warm. Besides, this method of regulating the warmth of the eggs, there are a great many others which readily offer of themselves. The doors alone of the cupboard, which may be called the small chicken oven, may afford many. It must have two doors at least in its height, the upper or under one of which may be opened as need requires. Each door may have besides one or two square apertures or windows, to be shut or opened as much or as little as is necessary, as each of them has its little shutter, that slides in two grooves, formed without the cupboard by a couple of wooden ledges nailed on it, the one