THREE THINGS

QUALITY

Our first consideration is quality. We know that in manufacturing for our fellow druggists we must earn and retain their entire confidence. We realize that if the products we supply are as good as they can be made that the drug trade will soon be aware of the fact as we are, and that the personal commendation from one druggist to another will secure for us the good name we are so earnestly seeking.

QUANTITY

Ordinarily, the larger buyer has an advantage over the smaller one, yet from a standpoint of qualification he is not entitled to it. In establishing a method of dealing we have sought to aid the small buyer as much as the larger one. Our price being practically the same to every buyer, in large or very small quantities, the exception alone being for specific articles in contract quantities. Our aim is to deal justly and squarely with every customer.

PRICE

No druggist ever says our prices are too high, though we have occasionally been told that our products were too cheap to be good.

We don't believe it nor do those who once buy from us; the belief is rather that they are very cheap to be so good.

We have frequently asked customers if they were getting satisfaction, and the reply has invariably been, "We are very well satisfied." We are convinced that never in the history of the drug trade have nicer finished and better articles been furnished for the price. We are exceedingly thankful for the support our fellow druggists have given us; we are learning lessons every day and are applying them so that the service we render may become more efficient and the confidence we receive the better deserved.
