

UNFITNESS FOR THE LORD'S SUPPER.

A DIALOGUE. (By the late Very Rev. Sir Herbert Oakeley.)

PART I. Clergyman.—Good morning to you, Mr. Powell; I am very glad to see you; I was afraid you were not well.

P.—I am glad to hear it; but I missed you in church yesterday; and I am afraid you were never absent when in health, I set down your absence to illness.

C.—I am sorry to hear that, Powell; I wish you however to tell me, because I dare say I shall be able to convince you that it was a bad reason, or no reason at all.

P.—Well, sir, I wish to be plain with you; and the truth is, that I kept away because I knew I should not like your sermon.

C.—Indeed! That certainly was a bad reason, inasmuch as the sermon is not the only, nor the chief object, which you ought to have in view, in going to church.

P.—I am sorry to hear that, Powell; I wish you however to tell me, because I dare say I shall be able to convince you that it was a bad reason, or no reason at all.

PETRIFIED FOREST ON THE NILE.

"There is," says a writer in the Bombay Times, "scarcely, perhaps, a spectacle on the surface of the globe more remarkable, either in a geological or picturesque point of view, than that presented by the petrified forest near Cairo."

The traveller having passed the tombs of the Caliphs, just beyond the gates of the city, proceeds to the southward nearly at right angles to the road, across the Desert to Suez; and after having travelled some ten miles up a low barren valley covered with sand, gravel, and seashells, fresh as if the tide had retired but yesterday, crosses a low range of sandy hills, which has for some distance run parallel to his path.

The scene now presented to him is beyond conception singular and desolate. A mass of fragments of trees, all converted into stone, and, when struck by his horse's hoof, ringing like cast-iron, is seen to extend itself for miles and miles around him in the form of a decayed and prostrate forest.

The wood is of a dark brown hue, but retains its form in perfection, the pieces being from 1 to fifteen feet in length, and from half a foot to 3 feet in thickness, strewn so thickly together, as far as the eye can reach, that an Egyptian donkey can scarcely thread its way through amongst them, and so natural that were it in Scotland or Ireland, it might pass without remark for some enormous drained bog, on which the exhumed trees lay rotting in the sun.

The roots and rudiments of the branches are, in many cases, nearly perfect, and in some the wormholes eaten under the bark are readily recognizable. The most delicate of the sap-veins, and all the finer portions of the centre of the wood are perfectly entire, and bear to be examined with the strongest magnifiers. The whole are so thoroughly silicified, as to scratch glass, and to be capable of receiving the highest polish.

Physically there is no finer race of men in the world than the Spanish peasantry. A walk of a few minutes from the Water-port to the Exchange of Gibraltar will convince us of this.

The Moor, especially when somewhat advanced in life, is a magnificent lion-like creature. He is rather above the middle size, stout built, large of limb, with great display of muscle, noble features, approaching to the Roman, an ample brow, a dark eye, and (in jockey phraseology) uncommonly fine action.

But live, with all their bodily speches, The slaves of buttons and tight breeches." The striking peculiarity of the Moor is his lion-like appearance. Often have I stood and gazed with admiration on a group of these swarthy turbaned children of the sun, squatted crosslegged, pipe in mouth, solemn and silent, under shelter of the parapet wall of the King's Bastion, and wondered at the singular resemblance which their grave countenance, strongly marked features, and air of savage dignity, gave them to the lord of the desert in repose.

The Moor may be the nobler animal of the two to look at, but for energy and endurance too, give me the fiery Spaniard. Under proper discipline what a noble soldier he would make! Patient of fatigue, reckless of hardship, temperate in his diet even to abstemiousness, daring in spirit, and energetic in action, few could cope with him in a long campaign.

He is ignorant and superstitious no doubt, and many vice has, springing from these sources and from his lawless life. But alas, my country! Scotland—enlightened, educated, Protestant Scotland—has one virtue at least which ought to put you sadly to blush. He is no drunkard! He is ignorant and superstitious, reckless and lawless, because he has not lived in a gospel land, nor under strict and impartial law.
