

The third page illustrates the differences between the two countries on a total cost basis. Both measures of total cost are included and are shown on both a pre- and post- exchange-rate-adjusted basis.

The final page depicts labour productivity⁶, which is shown as the ratio of Canadian to U.S. productivity levels. A 100 per cent value would indicate that productivity levels were the same between the two countries in that year.

⁶ Productivity is not available for Fishing, Hunting and Trapping since there is no employment data published for this sector.