

Huskins' visits and the new vista opened up in genetics were mentioned.

3. Biometrics was mentioned in several connections and the Physics Professor (Rowles) began to deal with this and other matters in a very suggestive way, talking of the mutual assistance of certain physical studies and certain biological studies. I asked whether if McGill had an Honours Course in Biology and Physics most of these special things he was dealing with could not be accommodated. He answered with no hesitation that every single one of them could be properly dealt with in the undergraduate course and that if there were such an Honours Course there would be many subjects for graduate study in which Macdonald College and the two Departments at McGill (Biology and Physics) could co-operate.
