

had freshly suffered from a volcanic eruption, all supplies must be carried up to the advancing troops, and also to the guns. The engineers have performed veritable miracles in this war, but none so astonishing as the way in which, right in the wake of advancing troops, they have been able to lay roads which successfully solved the transport problem, even after such a great advance as that of Vimy.

B-32. "ISH KA BIBBLE!"

This strange piece of slang is employed by the troops in France to express the sentiment of "I should worry!" This cheery soldier of the Dominion does not worry even though his boots have been sucked off by the mud.

B-33. RED CROSS TRAIN AT CLEARING STATION.

B-34. "THE PLACE WAS STRONG, OUR MEN WERE STRONGER."

The German Machine Gun Emplacement on the crest of Vimy Ridge and the men who drove the Huns out of it.

B-35. STEALING A RIDE.

Canadians returning to billet after victory steal a ride on a tank.

B-36. "SHELL OUT" IN A SHELL HOLE.

B-37. THE SMILE THAT WON'T COME OFF.

B-38. LOADING UP SHELL MULES.

The Army mule has always been the object of approbrium and ridicule. None the less, in war time, one mule is worth two horses. Nothing disturbs the mules' iron constitutions, while as pack animals they can carry a load of shells over ground which would wreck the mechanism of a lorry.

B-39. WRITING HOME.

B-40. NOT A TREE.

A remarkable picture taken at short range of a German Stick Bomb exploding in a swamp across which the Canadians were advancing.
