A Dental Paradox The dental work

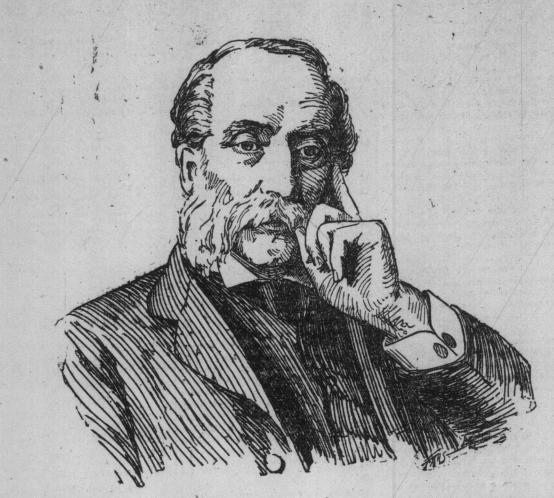

for which you pay less than a fair price costs more than it is worth. This rule is supported by the A, B, C of reasoning. The goodness of dental work depends upon the skill of the dentist, and skill is never cheaper than fair. The value of dental work-present and future - deends upon its goodness.

We preach fair prices - and practice the best work. Cheaper service cannot be as good. That is certain. Yet such service is always cheapest. That is sure.
