THE INGLENOOK PHILOSOPHER

OF KENNEBECASIS BAY

A short distance from my habitat there is a rocky elevation on the surface of which there are scattered many granite boulders, some of which would if placed on the scales, weigh several tons. How or when they were transported hither I can only surmise, and the most reasonable of my surmises is that millions of years ago they were imbedded in glaciers, perhaps on the sides of the Kennebec or the mountains of Greenland, and dropped here as those great bodies of ice melted as they journeyed with the currents into a warmer zone.

About midsummer I have always observed on these boulders tiny spots of greyish white, like drops of paint, which gradually enlarged, until some of them have become about a foot in diameter. They were imperceptible to the touch—apparently nothing but a blotch of color. With the aid of a magnifying glass I discovered that they were a species of lichen and that each spot was a magnificent flower, and at the same time a forest of trees and blooming shrubs, the tallest of which could not have been more than the hundredth part of an inch in height.

"What were these things made for?" I asked Aaron, as he looked through the glass.

And he answered, "I dunno."

On this same elevation a family of ants established itself a long time ago. For more than twenty years I have visited my ants when I chanced to be in the neighborhood. They have grown strong and number at least 1,000—every one a worker. Their fortress is about a yard in diameter, a foot high, and overgrown with grass. Its roof is flat and it is thatched with bits of wood about an inch long and one-fourth of an inch wide. Some of it was, no doubt, brought from a great distance—say ten to twenty yards away. The entrances are through the roof, which, except under extraordinary circumstances, was never known to leak. My ants are busy people; they work from daylight to daylight as if the day last summer I inadvertently stepped on their fortress. Contemplation ensued, like that experienced in San Francisco at the time of the earthquake, but everything has been restored to its normal condition; there are no grinders and no labor unions among my ants.

"What are the aims, hopes and aspirations of these people?" I said to Aaron one day.

And he answered, "I dunno."

Pollard (I remove my hat when I think of him) often joined me in my visits to my ants.

"What," said I one day, "do you suppose those tiny insects think of us?"

"Those fellows who are clambering down the wall," said Pollard, "are talking about us now. One says 'What on earth were those great uncouth idle creatures made for?' and another answers, 'They were not made, they just grew!' But we have no time to talk about trifles; let us be off to our work!"

Poor Pollard! After all of his fret and worry comes a little heap of new-made earth, of which a little later rank weeds will take possession and the memory of the man perishes forever.
