POETRY: STANZAS. BY THE LATE BISHOP HEBER AV THE LAYE ABOUT DEALER. The moon in silent brightness, Rides ofer the mountain brow, The mist in fleecy whiteness, Has clait the vale below ; Above the woodline how'r Dark waves the trysting tree ; I is, it is the hear, Oh come, my love, to me ! The dews of includ have wet me, While wandering louelily ; Thy father's ban is beset me-I only feared for thee. I creat beneath thy tower, I climbid the ivy tree ; And blessed be the hear I near hosen numbers That orings my love to inte-il for my chosen numbers. In yonder copse below, Each warrior highly slumbers, His land upon his bow ; From forth a tyrant's power They wait to set there free ; H is, it is the hour, "Oh come, my love, to me ! FIRST GLIMPSE OF THE SEA. BY PROFESSOR WILSON.

FIRST GLIMPSE OF THE SEA. BY PROFESSON WILSON. "By inore," apoen in Blackwood's Mension for August As D lo I upon the muranning waves A glorious Shape appearing ! A broad wing'd Vessel, through the shower Of glimmering lustre steering ; As if the beautoous ship enjoy'd The beauty of the sea, Ehe lifteth up her stately head And saileth joyfally, A lovely path before her lies, A lovely be beareth on ; A glorious phantom of the deep, Risen up to meet the Moon. The Moon hids her tenderest radiance fall On her wavy streamer and snow-white wings, And the quiet voice of the rocking sea. To cheer the gliding vision sings. Oh ! ne'er did sky and water blend In such a holy sleep, Or bathe in brighter quietade A roamer of the deef. So far the peaceful soul of Heaven Hath settled on the sea, H seems as if this weight of calm Were from eternity. O World of Waters ! the steadfast earth Ne'er lay entranced like Thee !
