Ban 7 Kilometre Advance As Safety Measure

GET THREE DAYS

Native Envoys Allowed To Return To Talk Terms With Chiefs

Canadian Press

ODJIDA, Morocco, April 19.—Whether there shall be peace or a continuation of the warfare in Morocco will be decided within the next three days. The first meeting of the Franco-Spanish and Rifian delegates in preliminary negotiations to settle upon the terms for an armistice was held yesterday at Camp Bertozos, but ended in complete disagreement. The three members of the Rifian delegation—all standing well above six feet, dressed in white flowing robes and wearing white turbans—declined to permit the French and Spanish troops to advance seven kilometres along the front as a military guarantee of good faith, and also objected to the Franco-Spanish proposal for the exchange of prisoners.

GIVEN THREE DAYS.

After a long discussion under a temperature of 80 degrees in the shade, the Rifians were given three days in which they might definitely accept or reject the terms offered. They were permitted to return to the Rif region by aeroplane to consult with their respective leaders. Meanwhile the proposed conference which was to have opened here today has been postponed without date. The optimism of the believers that the moment is temporary, the pessimists already hear the crack of rifles along the Lower Atlas Range and in the Ouergata Valley. Abd-el-Krim, whom both France and Spain refused formally to recognize as a belligerent or peace negotiator, holds the fate of Morocco in his hand. Upon his decision to accept or reject the terms of the French and Spanish taken to him by his delegates hinges war or peace. In addition to the refusal of the delegates to accept the military guarantees, entailing an advance of French troops into Rif territory and some formalities concerning the exchange of prisoners, it is learned from authoritative sources that there was still another fundamental point objected to. This was Spain's alleged demand that Abd-el-Krim not alone be forced to depart from the Rif but that he be not permitted to reside in any Moslem country. French official sources neither confirm nor deny this. All they admit is that the negotiations have been broken off for three days.
